THE

CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY OF "NGLAND

FIRST VOLUME

DONDOY
TRIATED BY SPOTTISWOODE AND CO
NEW STRIKES SQUADE

CONSTITUTIONAL HISTORY

ENGLAND

SINCE THE ACCESSION OF GEORGE THE TITIED

1760-1860

THOMAS ERSKINE MAY, CB

IN TWO VOLUMES

VOL I

LONGON LONGMAN, GREEN, LONGMAN, AND ROBERTS 1861

PREFACE.

It is the design of this history to trace the progress and development of the British Constitution, during a period of one hundred years, and to illustrate every material change,—whether of legislation, custom, or policy,—by which institutions have been improved, and abuses in the government corrected

The accession of George III presents no natural boundary in constitutional history but former reigns have already been embraced in the able survey of Mr Hallam, and frequent allusions are here made to events of an eather period, connected with the inquiries of the present work

In considering the history of our mixed government, we are led to study each institution separately, to mark its changes, and observe its relations to other powers and influences in the State With this view, I have found it necessary to deviate from a strictly chronological narrative, and to adopt a natural division of leading subjects. If this arrangement should appear occasionally to involve an meomplete view of particular events, and repeated references to the same period, under different aspects, I trust it will be found, on the whole, the most convenient and instructive. The form of the work is not the less historical Each inquiry is puisated throughout the entire century, but is separated from contemporary incidents, which more properly fall under other divisions.

VI PREFACE.

The present volume embraces a history of the prelogatives, influence, and revenues of the Crown, and of the constitution, powers, functions, and political relations of both Houses of Pauliament The second volume will comprise,—among other constitutional subjects,—a history of party. of the press, and political agitation, of the Church, and of civil and religious liberty It will conclude with a general leview of our legislation,—its pohcy and results,—during the same period

Continually touching upon controverted topics, I have endeavoured to avoid, as far as possible, the spirit and tone of controversy But, impressed with an earnest conviction that the development of popular liberties has been safe and beneficial, I do not affect to disguise the interest with which I have tacced it, through all the events of history Had I viewed it with distrist, and despondency, this work would not have been written

The policy of our laws, as determined by successive Parliaments, is so far accepted by statesmen of all parties, and by most unprejudiced thinkers, of the present generation, that I am at liberty to discuss it historically, without entering upon the field of party politics. Not dealing with the conduct and motives of public men, I have been under no restraint in adverting to recent measures, in order to complete the annals of a century of legislation.

London January 12th, 1861

CONTENTS

O.F

THE FIRST VOLUME

CHAPTER I

		 	 	DEVON	0.1	CLORGE	111

PAGE

F A D A C C C C C C C C C C C C C C C C C	Ţ
Influence of the Crown since the Revolution	2
Its som ces	5
Restrictions on the personal influence of the sovereign	ıb
Ministerial power and responsibility	8
Power of ministers regarded with jealousy by George III	10
His determination to exalt the kingly office
His secret counsellors	11
His policy and its dangers	12
He enforces it against his ministers	16
Lord Bute as premier carries out the king's policy	19
Then efforts to coerce the Opposition -	20 21
Lord Bute resigns Mr. Grenville co-operates in the king's unconstitutional policy	24 bit Grenville co-operates in the king's inconstitutions. Party	26
The king's differences with the Grenville ministry	29
His reluctant admission of the Rockingham ministry	81
Exerts his influence in Parliament against them	34
The king advances his policy with the aid of Lord Chatham	85
They unite in breaking up parties
Development of the king's policy under Lord North	37
The king his own minister	42
Protests against the influence of the Crown	43
Intimidation of peers in opposition to the Court	$_{70}$
Lord North driven from office by the Commons	49
Possile of transfer would of known aft	50

PAGE

Lord Rockingham's second ministry	51
Measures to restaun the king's influence .	, 52
The Coalition force their way into office	53
The king's influence employed against them	57
Use of the king's name in Parliament denounced	58
The Coalition dismissed	60
Mt Pitt becomes the king's minister	$\imath b$
Is met by violent opposition in the Commons	61
Motions to delay the supplies	64
Opposition continued	. 65
Triumph of Mr Pitt	70
Reflections on this struggle	ıb
General influence of the Crown augmented	75
The king's influence exerted against M1 Pitt .	76
His Majesty's opposition to Catholic emancipation	78
M1 Pitt resigns on that question	80
Influence of the Crown during the Addington ministry	82
M1 Pitt 1cinstated in office	88
The Grenville administration	85
The king's friends active against them .	88
Pledge required of ministers on the Catholic question	89
Then removal from office	90
Pledge discussed in Parliament	ıb
The kmg's appeal to the people on the Catholic question	97
His supremacy during the Perceval ministry	98
CHAPTER II
INFLUENCE OF THE CROWN DURING THE REGENCY, THE RE	IGNS OF
GEORGE IV , WILLIAM IV , AND HER MAJESTY QUEEN VIO	TORIA
Influence of the Court over the prince regent	99
His estrangement from the Whigs	100
Position of parties a proof of the paramount influence of Crown	. 103
Negotiations on the death of Mi Perceval	104
Ascendency of Tory politics under Lord Liverpool	107
Proceedings against Queen Caroline	ıb.
The bill of pams and penalties withdrawn	110
Mr Brougham's motion on the influence of the Crown	112
	112

THE FIRST VOLUME.	X1
	PAGE
George IV 's opposition to Catholic emancipation	113
Parliamentary reform favoured by William IV	115
His support of Earl Grey's ministry	117
He prevails upon the Lords to pass the Reform Bill	119
Sudden dismissal of the Melbourne ministry	121
Sn R Peel called to office while abroad	121
Is driven from office .	126
Diminution of the influence of the Crown shown by these events	,
Loid Melbourne in office on her Majesty's accession	1b
The "bed-chamber question"	127
Sir R Peel's second administration	128 131
Relations of ministers to the sovereign	182
Lord Palmerston's removal from office
Increased influence of the Crown now under due council	133
Continued influence of great families	136
CHAPTER III
PREROGATIVES OF THE CROWN DURING THE MINORITY OR INCAPA OF THE SOVEREIGN	CITY
Incapacity of a sovereign not recognised by law ,	130
George III 's first regency scheme, 1765	140
Doubts concerning the term "royal family"	143
Attempted exclusion of Princess of Wales from the regency	144
Meeting of Parliament during the king's second illness,
1788—9	146
The 11ghts of a regent debated	148
Regent to be appointed by bill founded on resolutions	150
Great seal to be used under authority of Parliament	151
A new speaker during the king's incapacity .	152
The commission to open Parliament	155
The regency bill stayed by the king's recovery	158
These proceedings considered	159
Munisterial embarrassments caused by the king's third illness,	* * *
1801	163
The king's fourth illness, 1804	166
Questions raised as to his capacity for business	168
Meeting of Parliament during his last illness, 1810	173

THE HOUSE OF LORDS, AND THE PEERAGE

Progressive increase of the peerage prior to reign of George III	229
Change in the character of the House by increase of numbers	ib
Profuse creations in the reign of George III	231
The peciage of Ireland	233

THE FIRST VOLUME	XIII
•
	PAGP
Present state of the peerage	235
Representative character of the House of Lords .	237
Rights of Scottish peers .	238
Gradual fusion of the peerages of the three kingdoms	241
Hereditary descent the characteristic of the peerage	242
Life peerages	243
The lords spiritual	249
Attempts to exclude them from the House of Lords	250
Increased number of the House of Lords, a source of strength	253
Political parties in the House	254
Collisions between the two Houses aveited by the influence of the Crown	256
Position of the Loids in reference to the Reform Bills	257
Proposed creation of peers	260
A creation of peers equivalent to a dissolution	262
The independence of the Lords unimparied by the reform
C11818 .	263
Then vantage ground	266
Circumstances affecting their political weight	гb
The peerage in its social relations	268
The baronetage and orders of kmghthood	269
CHAPTER VI
THE HOUSE OF COMMONS
	272
Anomalies of representation prior to reform Defects in the electoral system	272
Nomination boloughs	274
Various and limited rights of election	275
Bribery at elections	277
Sale of boroughs	280
Attempt to lestrain colluption	284
Act to prevent the sale of seats	287
Government boroughs	288
Revenue officers disfranchised	289
Vexatious contests in populous cities	290
	293
Territorial influence in countries	295
Defective representation of Scotland	298
And of Leland	200

		PAGE
Nominee members, the majority of the House		299
Injustice in the trial of election petitions		301
The Grenville Act		303
Improved constitution of election committees		306
Bibery of members by places and pensions		ib
Measures to restrain it		307
Places in the reign of George III		809
Judicial officers disqualified		811
Pecuniary bribes to members		312
During the reign of George III.		814
Members bribed by shares in loans and lotteries		818
By luciative contracts		821
Various sources of corruption condemned by Parliament		822
State of society favourable to these practices		824
How popular principles were kept alive		$\imath b$
The first schemes of parliamentary reform		826
M1 Pitt's motions for reform		329
Reform advocated by Mr Grey		834
Discouraged by the French Revolution		885
Reform motions at the beginning of this century		887
Lord J Russell's efforts for reform		339
Catholic emancipation a plea for reform		842
Gross cases of bribery at elections, 1826-27		343
Reform motions in 1880		345
Duke of Wellington's declaration .		847
Reform ministry		849
First reform bill in the Commons	,	350
The second rejected by the Lords .		352
Passing of the third reform bill .		858
Reform Act considered		355
Reform Acts of Scotland and Leland		857
Political results of the Reform Act		859
Bubery since the Reform Act		ib
Disfianchisement and other Acts to restrain bribery		361
Policy of legislation concerning bribery .		866
Efforts to shorten the duration of Parliaments		367
Motions in favour of vote by ballot .		371
Qualification Acts repealed		373
Proceedings at elections improved		375

ıb

Later measures of reform . . .

CHAPTER VII

RELATIONS OF PARLIAMENT TO THE CROWN, THE LAW, AND THE PROPLE

Proceedings of the Commons against Wilkes	386
And of the Lords ,	389
Wilkes returned for Middlesex	891
His two years' imprisonment	$\imath b$
His expulsion for libel on Lord Weymouth .	892
His ie-elections, and final exclusion	395
Lord Chatham's efforts to reverse the proceedings against Wilkes	398
Similar proceedings in the Commons	899
City address to the king on Wilkes's expulsion	401
Motions in the Lords to reverse the proceedings against
Wilkes	405
Resolutions against him expunged	406
Exclusion of strangers from parliamentary debates	407
Members of the Commons excluded from the Lords	41]
Consequent misunderstanding between the two Houses .	гĎ
Publication of parliamentary debates	415
Commencement of the system	415
Misiepiesentations of reporters .	416
Their personalities .	417
Contest between the Commons and the printers	418
Wilkes and the Lord Mayor interpose in their behalf	420
The Commons proceed against the city magistrates	422
Reports of debates permitted	427
Progress of the system	гð
Political results of reporting	429
Presence of strangers recognised	481
Publication of division lists	432
Publication of parliamentary papers .	484
Freedom of comment upon Parliament	485
Early petitions, and rights of petitioners	436
Commencement of modern system of petitioning	438
Petitioning at the beginning of the present century	44(
Abuses of petitioning .	442
Debates on presenting petitions restrained .	443
Pledges of members to candidates considered .	444

•	PAGE
Surrender of certain parliamentary privileges	446
Conflict of privilege and law	448
Su F Buidett's case	449
The Stockdale cases	450
Right of Parliament to publish papers affecting character	454
Moderation of the Commons in forwarding the admission of Jews to Parliament	456
Control of Parliament over the executive government	457
Over questions of peace and war	458
Advice of Pathament concerning a dissolution	459
Popular addresses on the same subject	460 Relations between the Commons and the ministers of the Ciown	462
Votes expressing confidence or otherwise	ib
Impeachments	468
Improved relations of the Crown with the Commons	465
Stability of governments, before and since reform, considered	$\imath b$
Control of the Commons over supply and taxes	468 Demands of the Crown agreed to, without exception, since the Revolution	470
Cases of delaying the supplies	471
Exclusive rights of the Commons over taxation	478
Power of the Lords to reject a money bill considered	474
Rejection of the paper duties bill, 1860	477
Sketch of parliamentary oratory	480
Orators of the age of Chatham and Pitt	481
Orators at the commencement of this century	485
Characteristics of modern oratory	490
Coarse personalities of former times	491
General standard of modern debate	491

CHAPTER I

GPOWTH OF THE INFLUENCE OF THE CROWN -- ITS SOURCES -- RE-STRICTIONS ON THE PERSONAL INFLUENCE OF THE SOVEREIGN -MINISTERIAL PLSPONSIBILITY - ACCESSION OF GEORGE III - HIS RE-SOLUTION TO EXERCISE A LARGER SHARE OF PERSONAL INFLUENCE IN THE GOVLENMENT - HIS POLICY, AND ITS EFFECTS - HIS RELATIONS WITH SUCCESSIVE MINISTERS DURING HIS REIGN

THE growth of the influence of the Chown, at a period Growth of in the history of this country when government by the infinprerogative had recently been subverted, and popular ughts and liberties enlarged, aftests the vital power of the Monarchy. At the Revolution, the arbitrary rule of the Stuart kings finally gave way to parhamentary government, with ministerial responsibility. Such a change portended the subjection of future kings to the will of Parliament, but it proved no more than a security for the observance of the law While the exercise of the 10val authority was restrained within the proper limits of the constitution, the Crown was shorn of none of its ancient prerogatives , but remained, as it had ever been, the source of all power, cayl and ecclesiastical,-" the fountain of honour,"-the first and paramount institution of the state Its powers, indeed, were now exercised by ministers responsible to Parliament, and the House of Commons was no longer held in awe by loyal prerogative Yet so great were the attributes of royalty, and so numerous its sources of influence, that, for more than a century after the Revolution, it prevailed over the more popular elements of the constitution. A Parlament representing the people little more than in name, and fiee, in great measure, from the restraint of public opinion, — which had not yet the means of being intelligently formed, or adequately expressed, — promoted the views of rival parties, rather than the interest of the people. This popular institution, designed to control the Crown, was won over to its side, and shared, while it supported, it ascendency. The Crown now governed with more difficulty, and was forced to use all its resources, for the maintenance of its authority but it governed as completely as ever

Meanwhile overy accession to the greatness of the country, favoured the influence of the Crown. By the microses of establishments and public expenditure, the means of patronage were multiplied. As the people grew more wealthy, considerable classes appeared in society, whose sympathies were with "the powers that be," and who coveted favours which the Crown alone could bestow. And thus, the very causes which ultimately extended the power of the people, for a long time served to enlarge the influence of the Crown. Vast and varyous were the sources of this influence.

Vast and various wete the sources of this influence. The Crown bestowed everything which its subjects most desired to obtain, honours, dignities, places and preferments. Such a power reached all classes, and swayed constituents, as well as Parliaments. The House of Lords has ever been more closely associated with the Crown and its interests, than the House of Commons. The nobles of every land are the support and ornament of the court; and in England they are recognised as an outwork of the monarchy,—a defence against the democratic elements of our institutions. The entire body is the creation of the Crown. The temporal peers, or then ancestors, have all been ennobled by royal favour, many have been raised to a higher dignity in the peciage, and others aspire to such an elevation. A peerage of the United Kingdom is an object of ambition to the Scotch and Irish Peers The Spinitual Lords owe their dignity to the Crown, and look up to the same source of power, for translation to more unportant secs Nearly all the highest honours and offices are engrossed by the nobility The most powerful duke, who has already emoved every other honour, still aspires to the Order of the Garter The lord-heutenancy of a county, - an office of feudal grandem, confers distinction and influence, of which the noblest are justly proud 1 Other great appointments in the state and royal household are emoved exclusively by pecis and then families, while a large proportion of the state patronage is dispensed by their hands. Then rank also brings them within the immediate reach of court favour and social courtesies, by which the most emment poers naturally become the personal friends of the reigning sovercign Accordingly, with some rare exceptions, the House of Lords has always ranged itself on the side of the Crown It has supported the king himself against his own ministers at has yielded up its convictions at his word, and where, by reason of party connections, it has been opposed to a ministry enjoying the confidence of the Crown, its opposition has been fceble or compliant 2 Nor has its general support of the throne been meonsistent with the theory of the constitution The Commons, on the other hand, representing the people, are assumed to be independent of the Crown, and jealous of its influence How to those have been their actual characteristics will be examined hereafter 1 but here it may be briefly said, that until the reform in the representation of the people in 1832, the counties were mainly under the influence of great and noble families (as they still are, to a considerable extent) a large proportion of the boroughs were either the absolute property of peers and their connexions, or entirely under their control, while in many other boloughs the inte-1est of the government was paramount at elections The cities and large towns alone had any pretensions to independence Except on iaie occasions, when all classes were animated by a strong public opinion, the representation of the people and popular interests was a constitutional theory, rather than an active political force. Had there been no party distinctions, there could scarcely have been an ostensible opposition to any ministers, whom the king might have chosen to appoint Members of Parliament sought eagerly the pationage of the Crown Services at elections, and support in Parliament, were rewarded with peciages. baronetcies, offices and pensions Such rewards were openly given the consideration was avowed. There were other secret rewards of a grosser character, which need not here be noticed 2. Not were constituents beyond the reach of the same influence. The collection and expenditure of an enormous and continually mereasing public revenue provided inferior places, -almost without number, -which were dispensed on the recommendation of members supporting the government Hence to vote with the ministers of the day was the sure road to advancement to vote against them, was certain neglect and proscription

 $^{\rm t}$  Though the office of Lond-Lueurescent does not date omher than the reign of Queen Elizabeth, it  $^{\rm t}$  See Chap V , Peers and Peerson of Company  $^{\rm t}$

&lt;sup>1</sup> See Chap VI (House of Commons) <sup>2</sup> See Chap VI,

To these sources of influence must be added the Lovalty of loyalty of the British people. He must indeed be a the people bad king, whom the people do not love Equally 1emarkable are then steady obedience to the law, and respect for authority. Then sympathies are generally on the side of the government In a good cause their active support may be rehed upon, and even in a bad cause, then prejudices have more often been enlisted in favour of the government, than against if How great then, for good or for evil, were the powers of a British sovereign and his ministers The destinies of a great people depended upon then wisdom, nearly as much as if they had wielded ai bitiary power

But while these various sources of influence con- Restrictimued to maintain the political ascendency of the tions on Crown, the personal share of the sovereign in the sonal influence of the government of the country was considerably restricted sometimes William III, the most able statesman of his day, though representing the principles of the Revolution, was yet his own minister for foreign affairs, conducted negotiations abroad, and commanded armies in the field But henceforward a succession of sovereigns less capable than William, and of ministers gifted with extraordinary ability and force of character, rapidly reduced to mactice the theory of ministerial responsibility The government of the state was conducted, Municipal throughout all its departments, by ministers responsible bilty to Parliament for every act of their administration, - without whose advice no act could be done. who could be dismissed for incapacity or failure, and impeached for political crimes, and who resigned

п 3

when their advice was disregarded by the Crown. or their policy disapproved by Parliament ministers thus responsible, "the kine could do no wrong" The Stuarts had strained pielogative so fai, that it had twice snapped asunder in their hands They had exercised it personally, and were held personally responsible for its exercise. One had paid the penalty with his head another with his crown; and their family had been proscribed for ever. But now, if the pierogative was strained, the ministers were condemned, and not the king If the people cried out against the government .-- instead of a revolution, there was merely a change of ministry Instead of dangerous conflicts between the Crown and the Parliament, there succeeded struggles between rival parties for parliamentary majorities, and the successful party wielded all the power of the state Upon ministers, therefore, devolved the entire burthen of public affairs they relieved the Crown of its cares and perils, but, at the same time, they appropriated nearly all its authority The king reigned, but his ministers governed

To an ambitious prince, this natural result of constitutional government could not fail to be distasteful, but the rule of the House of Hanover had hitheit to been peculiarly favourable to its development. With George I and George II, Hanoverian politics had occupied the first place in their thoughts and affections. Of English politics, English society, and even the English language, they knew httle. The troublesome energies of Paulament were an enigma to them, and they cheerfully acquiesced in the ascendency of able ministers who had suppressed ichellions, and crushed pretendens to their crown,—who had triumplied over parliamentary opposition, and had borne all the burthen of the government.

Left to the indulgence of their own personal tastes,—occupied by fiequent visits to the land of their birth,—by a Geiman court, favounites and mistresses,—they were not anxious to engage, more than was necessary, in the turbulent contests of a constitutional government Having lent their name and authority to competent ministers, they acted upon their advice, and aided them by all the means at the disposal of the court

This authority had fallen to the lot of ministers Ascenconnected with the Whig party, to whom the House of dency of the Whig Hanover mainly owed its throne The most emment party of the Tories had been tainted with Jacobite principles and connexions, and some of them had even plotted for the restoration of the Stuarts From their ranks the Pretender had twice drawn the main body of his adherents The Whigs, indeed, could not lay claim to exclusive loyalty, nor were the Tones generally obnoxious to the charge of disaffection, but the Whigs having acquired a superior title to the favours of the court, and being once admitted to office, contrived, - by union amongst themselves, by borough interests, and by their monopoly of the influence of the Crown, - to secure an ascendency in Parliament which, for nearly fifty years, was almost unassailable Until the fall of Sn Robert Walpole the Whigs had been compact and united, and their policy had gene-1 ally been to carry out, in practice, the principles of the Revolution When no longer under the guidance of that minister, their coherence, as a party, was disturbed, and they became divided into families and cliques To use the words of Lord John Russell, this "was the age of small factions" The distinctive policy of the party was lost m the personal objects of its leaders, but poltical power still remained in the same hands, and, by alhances rather than by umon, the "great Whig families," and others admitted to a share of their power, continued to engross all the high offices of state, and to distribute among their personal adherents the entire patronage of the Crown

I Introduction to vol. 111 of Bedford Cornespondence.

Accession of George III His jealousy of his minis-

The young king, George III, on succeeding to the throne, regarded with settled jealousy the power of his ministers, as an encroachment on his own, and resolved to break it down. His personal popularity was such as to facilitate the execution of this design Well knowing that the foreign extraction of his predecessors had repressed the affections of their people, he added, with his own hand, to the draft of his first speech to Parhament, the winning phrase, "Boin and educated in this country, I glory in the name of Briton "1 The Stuarts were now the aliens, and not the Hanovenan king A new reign, also, was favourable to the healing of political differences, and to the fusion of parties In Scotland, a few fanatical non-jurors may still have grudged their allegrance to an uncovenanted king But none of the young king's subjects had plotted against his throne, and few could be suspected of adherence to the fallen cause of the Stuarts. which had been hopelessly abandoned since the rebelhon of 1745 The close phalanx of the Whig party had aheady been broken, and Mr Pitt had striven to conciliate the Toues, and put an end to the bitter feuds by which the kingdom had been distracted. No party was now in disgrace at court, but Whigs, Tories, and

&lt;sup>2</sup> The king himself bone testimony to this fact upwards of forty pondence, in 189 (Diary)

Jacobites thronged to St James's, and vied with each other in demonstrations of lovalty and devotion 1

The king was naturally ambitious, and fond of the The king's active exercise of power, and his education, if otherwise neelected2, had raised his estimate of the personal 11ghts of a king, in the government of his country So far back as 1752, complaints had been made that the mince was surrounded by Jacobite pieceptois, who were training him in arbitrary principles of government 8 At that time these complaints were discredited as factious calumnies, but the political views of the king, on his accession to the thione, appear to confirm the suspicions entertained concerning his early education

His mother, the Princess Dowager of Wales, - herself ambitious and fond of power4. - had derived her views of the rights and authority of a sovereign from German courts, and encouraged the prince's natural propensities by the significant advice of "George, be king "5 Lord Waldegrave, who had been for some time governor to the prince, describes him as "full of princely prejudices contracted in the nursery, and improved by the society of bedchamber-women and pages of the back-stans "6

His groom of the stole, Lord Bute,-afterwards so notorious as his minister,-had also given the young

3 See dehate in House of Loids.

22nd March, 1753, Walpole's Mem,

iv 139, Dodington's Diary, 190, 194, 197, 228

"Walpole says, "The princess, whose amintaon yielded to none"— Mom, 1 12 "The princess was

<sup>1 &</sup>quot;The Earl of Lichfield, Sn Walter Bagot, and the principal Jacobites, went to Court, which George Selwyn, a celebrated wit, a counted for from the number of James's "— Walpole's Mem, 1 14

<sup>2</sup> Dodington's Diary, 171 The Princess of Wales said "His booklearning she was no judge of, though she supposed it small or useless "-Ibid , 357 , Wraxall's Mem , ii 39

andently fond of power, and all its appanages of observance "—Adolph Hist, 1 12 5 Kockingham Mem , 1 3 6 Lord Waldegrave's Mem , 9

pumce instruction in the theory of the British Constitution, and knowing little more than the pimcess herself, of the English people and government, had taught him that his own honour, and the interests of the country required the extension of his personal influence, and a more active exercise of his prerogatives. The chief obstacle to this new policy of the court was found in the established authority of responsible ministers, upheld by party connexions and panlamentary interest. Accordingly, the first object of the king and his advisers was to loosen the ties of party, and break down the confederacy of the great Whig families. The king desired to under take personally the chief administration of public affairs, to direct the polecy of his ministers,

His determination to govern Accordingly, the first object of the king and his advisers was to loosen the ties of party, and break down the confederacy of the great Whig families. The king desired to undertake personally the chief administration of public affairs, to direct the policy of his ministers, and himself to distribute the patronage of the Crown. He was ambitious not only to reign, but to govern. His will was stoong and resolute, his courage high, and his talent for intrigue considerable. He came to the throne determined to exalt the kingly office, and throughout his long reign, he never lost sight of that object.

Lord Bohngbroke's - theory Lord Bolingbroke had conceived the idea of a government under "a patriot king," 2—who should "govern as soon as he begins to reign,"—who should "call into the administration such men as he can assure himself will serve on the same principles on which he intends to govern,"—and who should "put himself at the head of his people in order to govern, or, more properly, to subdue all patries." But it had been no part of Lord Bolingbroke's conception, that the patriot king should suffer his favourities to stand between him and his "most able and faithful councillors"

 $<sup>^1</sup>$  See letter of Su J Phillips to Mi Ghenville, Sept 8th, 1763, 176  $hs,_{1V}$  274 (frenville Papers, n. 117, Bunke's Present Discontents,  $Works_{\rm j}$  n. 231

The ministry whom the king found in possession of Ministry at power at his accession, had been formed by a coalition the king's between the Duke of Newcastle and M1. Pitt. The accession former had long been the acknowledged leader of the great Whig connexion, and enjoyed extended parliamentary interest . the latter, by his eloquence and statesmanship, had become the most popular and powerful of the king's subjects The ministry also comprised the Grenville and Bedford sections of the Whig party. It was so strong in Parhament, that for some years the voice of opposition had been scarcely heard, and so long as it continued united, its position was impregnable

But, strong as were the ministers, the king was re- The king's solved to wrest all power from then hands, and to scenet exercise it himself For this purpose he called to his aid lors the Earl of Bute, and other secret counsellors, drawn from all parties The greater number were of the Tory party, whose views of prerogative were Jacobite. According to Horace Walpole, "they abjured their ancient master, but retained their principles "2 It was the king's object not merely to supplant one party, and establish another in its place, but to create a new party, faithful to himself, regarding his personal wishes, carrying out his policy, and dependent on his will. This party was soon distinguished as "the kine's men." or "the king's friends" Instead of relying upon the advice of his responsible ministers, the king took counsel with this "double" or "interior cabinet" Even his first speech to Parliament was not submitted to the cabinet

The Idea of a Patnot King, 3 Bunke's Present Discontents, Works, 1v 330 Works, 11 240-242. 2 Walp Mem., 1, 15

It had been drawn up by himself and Lord Bute, and when Mr Pitt took exception to some of its expressions. the kmg long resisted the advice of his minister. It had been usual for munsters to rely upon the support of the Crown, in all their measures They now found themselves thwarted and opposed, and the patronage, which they had regarded as then own, they saw divided by the king amongst his new adherents and their connexions. This "influence behind the throne" was denounced by all the leading statesmen of that time,-by Mr Grenville. Lord Chatham, the Marquess of Rockingham, the Duke of Bedford, and Mr Burke. Occasionally demed, its existence was yet so notorious, and its agency so palpable, that historical writers of all parties, though taking different views of its character, have not failed to acknowledge it The bitterness with which it was assailed at the time was due, in great measure, to political jealousies, and to the king's selection of his friends from an unpopular party, but, on constitutional grounds, it could not be defended

Constatutional relations of the king to his ministers

A constitutional government ensures to the lang a wide authority, in all the councils of the state. He chooses and dismisses his ministers. Their resolutions upon every important measure of foreign and domestic policy are submitted to his approval, and when that approval is withheld, his ministers must either abandon then policy, or resign their offices. They are responsible to the king on the one hand, and to Parlament on the other, and while they retain the confidence of the king, by administering affains to his satisfaction, they must act upon principles, and propose measures, which they can justify to Parlament. And here is the proper limit to the king's influence. As he governs by responsible ministers, he must recognise their responsibilities. They are not only his ministers, but also the public servants of a free country But an influence in the direction of public affans thus limited, by no means satisfied the ambition of the king. His courtiers represented that the king was enthialled by the dominant party, which had become superior to the throne itself, and that in order to recover his just prerogative, it was necessary to break up the combination But what was this in His ateffect but to assert that the king should now be his own break up minister? that ministers should be chosen, not because parties they had the confidence of Parhament and the country. but because they were agreeable to himself, and willing to carry out his policy? - And this was the true object of the king It will be seen that when ministers, not of his own choice, were in office, he plotted against them and overthrew them, and when he had succeeded in establishing his friends in office, he enforced upon them the adoption of his own policy.

The king's tactics were finight with danger, as well Danger of to the Crown itself, as to the constitutional liberties of the king's the people, but his personal conduct and character have sometimes been judged with too much severity That he was too fond of power for a constitutional monarch, none will now be found to denv that he sometimes resorted to crafty expedients, unworthy of a king, even his admirers must admit With a narrow understanding, and obstinate prejudices, he was yet patriotic in his feelings, and laboured, earnestly and honestly, for the good government of his country If he loved nower, he did not shrink from its cares and toil If he delighted in being the active ruler of his people, he devoted himself to affairs of state, even more laboriously than his ministers If he was jealous of the authority of the Crown, he was not less jealous of the honour and greatness of his people A just recognition of the personal ments of the king himself, enables us to judge more freely of the constitutional tendency and results of his policy

To revert to a polity under which kings had governed, and ministers had executed their orders, was in itself a dangerous retrogression in the principles of constitutional government If the Crown, and not its ministers, governed, how could the former do no wrong, and the latter be responsible? If ministers were content to accept responsibility without power, the Crown could not escape its share of blame. Hence the chief safeguard of the monarchy was endangered But the liberties of the people were exposed to greater peril than the Crown Power proceeding from the king, and exercised by himself in person, is irreconcilable with popular government. It constitutes the main distinction between an absolute, and a constitutional monarchy. The best and most enlightened of kings, governing from above, will press his own policy upon his subjects Choosing his ministers from considerations personal to himself, - directing then acts, - upholding them as his own servants, - resenting attacks upon them as disrespectful to himself,—committed to their measures. and resolved to enforce them, -viewing men and things from the elevation of a court, instead of sharing the interests and sympathies of the people. - how can he act in harmony with popular influences?

The system of government which George III found in operation, was indeed imperfect. The influence of the Crown, as exercised by ministers, prevailed over the more popular elements of the constitution. The great nobles were too powerful. A Parhament, without adequate representation of the people, and uncontrolled by public opinion, was generally subservient to the ministers but with all its defects, it was still a popular institution If not freely elected by the people, it was vet composed of men belonging to various classes of society, and sharing then interests and feelings. The statesmen, who were able by then talents and influence to command its confidence, became the ministers of the Crown, and power thus proceeded from below, instead of from above The country was governed by its ablest men, and not by favourtes of the court The proper authority of Parhament was recognised, and nothing was wanting in the theory of constitutional government, . but an improved constitution of Parhament itself This system, however, the king was determined to subvert He was realous of ministers who derived their authority from Parhament rather than from himself, and of the parliamentary organisation which controlled his power The policy which he adopted, and its results are among the most critical events in the history of the Crown

The dissolution of Panhament, shortly after his King's inaccession, afforded an opportunity of strengthening the strengthparliamentary connexion of the king's friends Parlia- credit the ment was kept sitting while the king and Loid Bute election were making out lists of the court candidates, and using every exertion to secure then return. The king not only wrested government boroughs from the ministers. in order to nominate his own friends, but even encouraged opposition to such ministers as he conceived not to be in his interest 1

<sup>1</sup> The Duke of Newcastle thus wrote at this time to Lord Rockmeham -- "My Lord Anson has secesyed or ders from the hing himself to declare to the docks (at Portsmouth) that they may vote for whom they please at the Hampshue election, even though the Chancellor of the Ercheques is a candi-date" Loid Bute complained to the First Lord of the Admiralty, that he had disposed of the Admiialty holoughs without acquainting the king — Dodington's Diary, 483, Rockingham Mem, 1. 61—64.

At the meeting at the cockpit, the night before the assembling of the new Parliament, to hear the king's speech read, and to agree upon the choice of a speaker, not only the Whigs and parliamentary supporters of the government attended, but also the old Tories in a strong body, though without any invitation from the ministers! The speaker selected by Loid Bute was Sir Labric Citer, a country agreetlesses and a Tory.

Measures taken to break up the ministry

John Cust, a country gentleman and a Tory Lord Bute, the originator of the new policy, was not personally well qualified for its successful promo-He was not connected with the great families who had acquired a preponderance of political influence, he was no parhamentary debater, his manners were unpopular he was a courtier rather than a politician his intimate relations with the Princess of Wales were an object of scandal, and, above all, he was a Scotchman The jealousy of foreigners, which had shown itself in hatred of the Hanovenans, was now transferred to the Scottish nation, whose connexion with the late civil war had exposed them to popular obloguy The scheme was such as naturally occurred to a favourite, but it required more than the talents of a favourite to accomplish While only in the king's household, his influence was regarded with realousy remarks were already made upon the unlucky circumstance of his being a "Scot," and popular prejudices were aroused against him, before he was ostensibly concerned in public affairs Immediately after the king's accession he had been made a privy councillor, and admitted into the cabinet An arrangement was soon afterwards concerted, by which Lord Holdernesse retired from office with a pension, and Lord Bute succeeded him as Secretary of State 2

<sup>1</sup> Rockingham Mem , 1 68 , <sup>2</sup> 25th March, 1761 Dodington's Diary, 433

It was now the object of the court to break up the existing ministry, and to replace it with another, formed from among the king's friends Had the ministry been united, and had the chiefs reposed confidence in one another, it would have been difficult to overthrow them But there were aheady jealousies amongst them, which the court lost no opportunity of fomenting 1 A breach soon arose between Mr Pitt, the most powerful and popular of the ministers, and his colleagues He desned to strike a sudden blow against Spain, which had concluded a secret treaty of alliance with France, then at war with this country? Though war minister, he was opposed by all his colleagues except Lord Temple. He bore himself haughtily at the council, - declared that he had been called to the ministry by the voice of the people, and that he could not be responsible for measures which he was no longer allowed to guide Being met with equal loftmess in the cabinet, he was forced to tender his resignation.8

The king overpowered the 1etiring minister with Pension to kindness and condescension He offered the barony Mr Patt of Chatham to his wife, and to himself an annuity

Lord Herdwicke said, "He (Lord Bute) principally availed himself with great ait and finesse of the dissensions between the Duke of Newcastle and Mi Pitt he played off one against the other tell he got aid of the popular mmister, and when that was compassed, he strengthened himself in the cabinet, by bringing in Lord Egre-mont and Mi Grenville, and never left intriguing till he had rendered it impracticable for the old dake to it impracticable for the old duke to further intend to do, was the cause continuo m office with credit and of my resigning the seals "—Chathonour " - Rockingham Mem , 1 6 See the duke's own letters, to, 102 -109

<sup>2</sup> Grenville Papers, 1 386 3 Ann Reg , 1761 [43]. Gen-ville Papens, i 301, 405 Mi Pitt, in a letter to Mi Beckford, October 15th, 1761, says, "A difference of opinion with regard to measures to be taken against Spain, of the highest importance to the honour of the Crown, and to the most essential national interests, and this founded on what Spain had sheady done, not on what that count may ham Corresp , n 159

of 3,000l a year for three lives 1. The minister had deserved these royal favours, and he accepted them, but at the cost of his popularity It was an aitful stroke of policy, thus at once to concluste and weaken the popular statesman, whose opposition was to be dieaded, -and it succeeded. The same Gazette which announced his resignation, also trumpeted forth the peciage and the pension, and was the signal for clamours against the public favourite

Influence of Lord Bute

On the retnement of Mr Pitt, Lord Bute became the most influential of the ministers. He undertook the chief management of public affairs in the cabinet, and the sole duection of the House of Loids? He consulted none of his colleagues, except Loid Egremont and M1 George Grenville 8 His ascendency provoked the realousy and resentment of the king's veteran minister. the Duke of Newcastle who had buther to distributed all the nationage of the Crown, but now was never consulted The king himself created seven peers, without even acquainting him with their creation 2 Lord Bute gave away places and pensions to his own friends, and paid no attention to the recommendations of the duke At length, in May 1762, his grace, after frequent disagreements in the cabinet and numerous affronts, was obliged to resign 5

<sup>1</sup> Mt Pitt said, "I confess, Sn, I had but too much reason to expect your Majesty's displeasure I did not come prepared for this exceeding goodness Pardon me, Su, it overpowers, it oppresses me," and burst mto tems - Ann Reg , Grenwille Papers, 1 413 Rockingham Mem , 1 54, 86,

<sup>101 (</sup>Letters of the Duke of Newcastle)

<sup>3</sup> Ibid, 104

<sup>4</sup> Walpole Mem , 1 156,

The personal demeanous of the king towards him evinced the feeling with which he had long been logarded The duke complemed of it in this manner "The king did not drop one word of concern at my leaving him, nor even made me a polite compliment, after near fifty years' service and devotion to the interests of his loyal family I will say nothing more of myself, but that I believe never any man was so dismissed "-Letter to Lord Rock-

And now, the object of the court being at length Lord Bute attained, Loid Bute was immediately placed at the "spicimer head of affairs, as First Loid of the Treasury Rapid had been the use of the king's favourite. In thirteen months he had been groom of the stole, a privy councillor, ranger of Richmond Park, secretary of state, and premier 1, and these favours were soon followed by his installation as a Knight of the Garter, at the same time as the king's own brother, Prince William. His sudden elevation resembled that of an eastern vizier, rather than the toilsome ascent of a British statesman confidence of his royal master served to aggravate the jealousies by which the new minister was surrounded. to widen the breach between himself and the leaders of the Whig party, and to afford occasion for popular reproaches It has been insinuated that he was uiged forward by secret enemies, in order to insure his speedier fall 2, and it is certain that had he been contented with a less prominent place, the consummation of his peculiar policy could have been more securely, and perhaps more successfully, accomplished

The king and his minister were resolved to carry Arbitrary matters with a high hand3, and their arbitrary attempts conduct of the king to coerce and intimidate opponents disclosed then and the imperious views of the prerogative Prehminaries of ter a treaty of peace with France having been agreed upon, against which a strong popular feeling was aroused, ingham, May 19th, Rockingham Mem, 1 111 Yet Lord Bute, m a letter to Mr Grenville, May 25th, 1702, says, "The king's conduct to the Duke of Newcastle to-day was great and generous" - Gren-ville Papers, 1 448

His countess also received an 200 English barony

&lt;sup>2</sup> Walpolo Mem , r 44, "The king, it was given out, would be king, it was given out, would be king,—would not be dictated to by his ministers, as his grandfather had been. The precogative was to shine out, great loads. must be humbled "-Walp Mem , 1.

the king's vengeance was directed against all who ventured to disapprove them

The Duke of Devonshire having declined to attend the council summoned to decide upon the peace, was insulted by the king, and forced to resign his office of Lord Chamberlain A few days afterwards the king, with his own hand, struck his grace's name from the list of privy councillois For so great a severity the only precedents in the late reign were those of Lord Bath and Lord George Sackville, "the first," says Walpole, "in open and virulent opposition, the second on his ignomimous sentence after the battle of Minden" 2 No sooner had Loid Rockingham heard of the treatment of the Duke of Devonshire, than he sought an audience of the king, and having stated that those "who had hitherto deservedly had the greatest weight in the country were now driven out of any share in the government, and marked out rather as objects of his Maiesty's displeasure than of his favour," resigned his place in the household 8

A more general proscription of the Whig nobles soon followed. The Dukes of Newcastle and Grafton, and the Marquess of Rockingham having presumed, as peers of Parhament, to express their disapprobation of the peace, were dismissed from the lot-dieutenancies of their counties. The Duke of Devomshire, in order to share the fate of his friends and avoid the affiont of dismissal, resigned the heutenancy of his county.

Not was the vengeance of the court confined to the heads of the Whig party. All placemen, who had voted against the prelimmaries of peace, were dismissed. Their humble friends and chents were also proscribed. Clerks were removed from public offices, and inferior officers from the customs, and excise, and other small appointments, for no other offence than that of having been appointed by their obnoxious patrons 1 While bribes were being lavished to purchase adhesion to the court policy, this severity was intended to discourage opposition

&lt;sup>1</sup> Walp Mem, 1 201, Rockngham Mem, 1 195 (Letter of Duke of Newcastle to Lord Rockngham) <sup>2</sup> Lett Rocking A Rock <sup>5</sup> Wal

Walp. Mem, 1 203

&lt;sup>3</sup> Letter to Duke of Cumberland, Rockingham Mem, 1 142 <sup>4</sup> Rockingham Mem, 1 155 <sup>5</sup> Walp Mem, 1 235, Rockingham Mem, 1 156

The prehmmanes of peace were approved by Parlia- Its officet ment, and the Princess of Wales, exulting in the success ties of the court, exclamed, "Now my son 18 king of England "2 But her exultation was premature As vet there had been little more than a contention for power, between rival parties in the anstocracy, but these stretches of prerogative served to unite the Wlngs into an organised opposition. Since the accession of the House of Hanover, this party had supported the Crown as ministers It now became their office to assert the liberties of the people, and to resist the encroachments of prerogative Thus the king's attempt to restore the personal influence of the Sovereign, which the Revolution had impaned, so far from strengthening the throne. advanced the popular cause, and gave it powerful leaders, whose interests had hitherto been enlisted on the side of the Crown Claims of prerogative became the signal for the assertion of new rights and liberties. on the part of the people

The fall of the king's favoured minister was even more Suddenfull sudden than his rise He smank from the difficulties of Bute his position, — a disunited cabinet, — a formidable opposition, — doubtful support from his friends, — the bitter liatited of his enemies, — a libellous press, — and notorious unpopularity <sup>1</sup> Afraid, as he confessed, "not only of falling himself, but of involving his loyal master in his rium," he resigned suddenly, — to the surprise of all parties, and even of the king himself, — before he had held office for eleven months But his short administration had indulged the king's love of rule, and encouraged him to proceed with his cherished scheme for taking an active part in the direction of public affairs.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Walp Mem, 1 233, Gren-ville Papers, 1 453, Rockingham, Mem, 1 152, 158. 2 Walv Mem . 1 233

Nor did Lord Bute propose to relinquish his own power together with his office. He retreated to the interior cabinet, whence he could direct more securely the measures of the court 2, having previously negotrated the appointment of Mr George Grenville as his successor, and arranged with him the nomination of the cabinet 8 The ministry of Mi. Grenville was constituted in a manner favourable to the king's personal views, and was expected to be under the control of himself and his favourite. And at first there can be little doubt that Mr. Grenville found himself the mere agent of the court. "The voice was Jacob's voice, but the hands were the hands of Esan " "The public looked still at Lord Bute through the cuntam," said Lord Chesterfield, "which indeed was a very transparent one". But Mr Grenville was by no means contented with the appearance of power. He was realous of Lord Bute's superior influence, and complained to the king that his Majesty's confidence was withheld from his minister 1 As fond of power as the king himself,-and with a will as strong and imperious, - tenacious of his rights as a minister, and confident in his own abilities and influence, - he looked to Parliament rather than to the Crown, as the source of his authority

&lt;sup>1</sup> He was hissed and pelted at the penning of Perhament, 25th Nov, mont, Gienville Papers, n. 85-1762, and his family were alarmed for his personal safety

The king finding his own scheme of government op- The king posed, and dishking the uncongenial views and had dishking the uncongenial views and dishking the uncongenial views are dishking the uncongenial views and dishking the uncongenial views are dishking the uncongenial views and dishking the uncongenial views are dishking the uncongenial views and dishking the uncongenial views are dishking the uncongenial views and dishking the uncongenial views are dishking the uncongenial views and dishking the uncongenial views are dishking the uncongenial views and dishking the uncongenial views are dishking the uncongenial vi temper of his minister, resolved to dismiss him on the Pitt first convenient opportunity 2 Accordingly, on the death of Lord Egremont, he commissioned Lord Bute to open negotiations with Mr Pitt, for the formation of a new administration And now the king tasted the bitter fruits of his recent policy. He had proscribed the Whip leaders He had determined "never upon any account to suffer those ministers of the late reign, who had attempted to fetter and enslave him, to come into his service, while he lived to hold the sceptie "8 Yet these were the very ministers whom Mr Pitt proposed to restore to power, and stranger still, - the premier in whom the king was asked to lepose his confidence. was Earl Temple, who had recently aroused his bitter resentment His Majesty was not likely so soon to retract his resolution, and refused these hateful terms "My honour is concerned," he said, "and I must support it "4 The Grenville ministry, however distasteful, was not so hard to bear as the restoration of the dreaded Whigs, and he was therefore obliged to retain it Mr Grenville now remonstrated more strongly than ever against the

&lt;sup>1</sup> Gienville Papers, n 84, 85, 80

<sup>2</sup> Ibid , n 83, 85

<sup>3</sup> Letter of Lord Bute to the n 93, 105, 196

Letter of Lord Aut 1, 1789

Duke of Bodford, 2nd April, 1763, Gienville Papers, ii 96, 107

influence of the favourite who had been employed to supplant him the king promised his confidence to the numerous, and Lord Bute retired from the court '

Though George III and Mr Grenville differed as to then relative powers, they were but too well agreed in then policy Both were arbitrary in their views, impatient of opposition, and resolute in the exercise of authority The chief claims of the Grenville ministry to distinction were its arbitrary proceedings against Wilkes, which the king encouraged and approved, and the first taxetion of America, which he himself sucge-ted 2 In the policy of proscription, which had disgraced the late administration, the king was even more forward than his ministers Earl Temple's friendship for Wilkes was punished by the erasure of his name from the list of privy councillois, and by dismissal from the lord-heutenancy of his county.9 General Conway, Colonel Barré, and Colonel A'Court were, for their votes in Parliament, deprived of their unlitary commands 4, and Lord Shelburne of his office of aide-de-camp to his Majesty

The pavileges of Parhament were systematically violated by the king. In order to guard against the arbitrary interference of the Crown in its proceedings, Parhament had established, for centuries, the constitutional doctime that the king should not hear or give credit to reports of its debates, and that no member should suffer molestation for his speaking or reasoning 5 Yet, during the proceedings of the Commons against Wilkes, the king obtained from Mr. Grenville the most

&lt;sup>1</sup> Gienville Papers, n. 106, 483, 500, Chatham Corresp, n. 236, Walp Mem, n. 65
Paul Ilist, v. 1327

<sup>2</sup> Warvall's Mem, n. 111

*Rot Parl, m. 456, 611, 4 Hen VIII c. 8

May 7th, 1763, Grenville Papers, u 55.

minute and circumstantial reports. Not only did he watch the progress of every debate, and the result of each division, but he kept a jealous eye upon the opimons and votes of every member, and expressed his personal resentment against all who did not support the government It was he who first proposed the dismissal of General Conway, "both from his civil and military commissions." it was he who misisted on the removal of Mr Fitzherbert from the Board of Trade, and of all placemen who took a different view of parhamentary privilege from that adopted by the count1 M1 Grenville endeavoured to moderate the king's severity he desired to postpone such violent measures till the proceedings against Wilkes should be concluded2, and, in the meantime, opened communications with General Conway in the hope of averting his dismissal 8 But, at length the blow was struck, and General Conway was dismissed not only from his office of Groom of the Bedchamber, but from the command of his regiment of diagoons 4 Mr Calcraft was also deprived of the office of Deputy Muster-Master 5 The king himself was, throughout, the chief promoter of this policy of proscription 6

To commit General Conway or Colonel Barré to mison, as James I had committed Sn Edwin Sandys.

General Conway voted once only

Gienville Papers, ii 162, 165, 166 (letters from the king to Mr. too (series nom the Ring to Mr (therwille, 16th, 23d, and 24th Nov, 1763), ibid, 223, 228-9 2 ibid, 224, 229, 230, 266, 267, 484 (Diary, 16th, 25th, and 30th Nov, 2nd Dec 1763, 19th Jan, 1714) 17641 5 Ibid . 281 - 288

<sup>4</sup> Grenville Papers, u 206 "Mr Grenville never would admit the distinction between civil and nilitary appointments"—General Papes, 11 294, 507 It has been stated that Rockingham Mem , 1 178 against the ministry on General Wanants, having supported them in the contest with Wilkes (History of a Late Minority, 291, Rockingham Mem, 1 178), but this was not the case Mr Gienville in his Diary, Nov 15th, 1763, speaks of M1 Conway's vote both times with the minority -Grenville Papers, 11 223

and as Chales I had committed Selden and other leading members of the House of Commons, could not now have been attempted. Not was the ill-omened venture of Charles I against the five members likely to be repeated, but the king was violating the same pinciples of constitutional government as his arbitrary predeces-ors. He pumshed, as far as he was able, those who had incurred his displeasme, for their conduct in Palament, and demed them the protection which they claimed from privilege, and the laws of their country Yet the Commons submitted to this violation of their feedlom, with scarcely a munimu.

Public dis-

The nots and popular discontents of this period ought to have convinced the king that his statesminship was not successful. He had aheady searchfeed his populantly to an ill-regulated love of power. But he continued to direct every measure of the government, whether of legislation, of administration, or of patronage, and by means of the fauthful reports of his munister, he constantly assisted, as it were, in the deliberations of Parhament?

King's differences with the Grenville ministry

In 1765, differences again arose between the king and the Grenville munstry. They had justly offended him by their mismanagement of the Regency Bill *,—they had absputed with him on questions of patronage and expenditure,—they had wearied him with long arguments in the closet *, and, in the month of May, having completely lost his Majesty's confidence, he intimated to them his intention of dispensing with their services.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Pail Hist, xvi 1765
<sup>2</sup> Grenville Papers, ni 4-15, 21-37. The king's communications were sometimes sufficiently peremptory Writing May 21st, 1765, he says "Mr Grenville, I am surprised that you are not yet come, when you know it was my orders to be attended this evening I expect you, therefore, to come the moment you receive this "— Grenulle Papers, in 40

See ufra, p 142
 Walp Mem, n 161

But the king, after van negotiations with Mr Pitt through the Duke of Cumberland, finding himself unable to form another administration, was again compelled to retain them in office. They had suspected the secret influence of Lord Bute in thwarting then counsels, and to him they attributed their dismissal 1 The first condition, therefore, on which they consented to remain in office, was that Lord Bute should not be suffered to interfere in his Majesty's councils "in any manner or shape whatever "2 To this the king pledged himself 3, and though suspicions of a secret correspondence with Lord Bute were still entertained, there is every reason for beheving that he adhered to his promise 4 Indeed, he had already acquired so much confidence in his own aptitude for business, that he no longer relied upon the Sogreat was the pealousy of Michemille and the Duke of Bedford of the minumes of Lord Bute uniformatical that the property of the minumes of Lord Bute unions, the property of the Lord Bute unions, the property of the Lord Bute unions, and other business—M. General Lord Bute, 22nd May, 25 Minutes of Callinet, 22nd May, 25 Minutes, 25 Minutes,

10a Monthing of clock at might the "At eleven M Great rull, and told lim. he had considered upon the proposals made to him he of the promise and declare to them that Lord him the should never, directly normanically, have navthing to do with his hismess, no gave advice upon anything wheters — Dang, Great and the should be sho

wille Papers, m 185

<sup>4</sup> Mem of C J Fov, 1 65-68, 111, kmg bei
Mi Mackutosh to Bail Temple, Aug 30th, 1765, Grewelle Papers, sentime
11 81 Wravall's Mem, 1 78, fore"

<sup>5</sup> E Mr Greuvulle was still so 1v 408

assuccess of Load Bate's influence, that being told in November, 1705, by Mi Jenkmon hat Load Bate laid only seen the king twice during law illness in White laid only seen the king twice during law illness in White laid of the laid only seen the king twice during law illness in White laid of the laid of t

It was not until Dee 1768, that M Grenville seems to have been persuaded that Lord Bute's muceno was lost. He then concurred in the prevailing opinion of "the lang being grown indifferent to him, but the puncess being in the same sentiments towards him as before" — Duny, Grewille Rapers, counsels of his favourite. He was able to rule alone: and wanted instruments, rather than advisers second condition was the dismissal of Mr. Stuart Mackenzie, Lord Bute's brother, from the office of Privy Seal in Scotland, and from the management of the affairs of that country In this, too, the king yielded, though sorely against his will, as he had promised the office for life 2 Meanwhile the breach between the king and his ministers became still wider. They had been forced upon him by necessity, they knew that he was plotting their speedy overthrow, and protested against the intrigues by which their influence was counteracted The Duke of Bedford besought the king "to permit his authority and his favour to go together," and these remonstrances were represented by the king's friends as insolent and overbearing 4 An outery was raised against the ministers that they "desired to enslave the king," who was now determined to make any sacrifices to get 11d of them

Negotiations with the Whier

The negotiations for a new ministry were again conducted on behalf of the king, by his uncle the Duke of Cumberland Such was the popular hatred of Lord Bute and his countivmen, that the Duke's former severities against the Scotch, which had gained for hun the name of "the Butcher," were now a claim to popular favour The rebellious Scots had been treated as they deserved, and he who had aheady chastised them, was not the man to favour then pretensions at comt

These negotiations were protracted for seven weeks. July, 1765

respondence, m Introd, pp xlm

&lt;sup>1</sup> Bedford Corresp , m 264 <sup>2</sup> Walp Geo III , n 175 , Gren-ville Papers, m 185 He was after-

alv 280, Gienville Papers, in 194 Junus, Lettel xxiii , Burke's Works, n 156, Walp Geo III, n 182, Bedford Corresp, m 286 wards restored in 1766 by the Earl of Chatham -Ib, 362

<sup>3 12</sup>th June, 1765, Bedford Cor-

while the country was virtually without a government 1 Mr Pitt was again impracticable the further contanuance of the Grenville ministry could not be endured. and, at length, the kmg was reduced to the necessity of surrendering himself once more to the very men whom he most dreaded

The Marguess of Rockingham, the leader of the ob- Rocking. noxious Whig anstocracy,—the statesman whom he had ham mirecently removed from his heutenancy,-the king was now obliged to accept as Premier, and General Conway, whom he had deprived of his regiment, became a Secretary of State, and leader of the House of Commons The policy of proscription was, for a time at least, reversed and condemned Mr Pitt, when solicited by the Dismission Duke of Cumberland to take office, had named as one of officers of his conditions, the restoration of officers dismissed on nolitical grounds. This the king had anticipated, and was prepared to grant 2 The Rockingham administration insisted on the same terms, and according to Mr Bulke "discountenanced, and it is hoped for ever abohshed, the dangerous and unconstitutional practice of removing military officers, for their votes in Parliament "8 The Whig leaders were not less realous of the in- Conditions fluence of Lord Bute, than the ministry whom they of the Rockingdisplaced, and before they would accept office, they him minisinsisted "that the thought of replacing Mr Mackenzie should be laid aside, and also that some of the particular friends of the Earl of Bute should be removed. as a proof to the world that the Earl of Bute should not either publicly or privately, directly or indirectly, have any concern or influence in public affans, or in

Walp Mem, n 192
 Short According Thid, n 165 Duke of Cumberland's Nariative, Rockingham Short Account of a Late Short Mem , 1 193-196 ministers "2

The king's frands

the management or disposition of public employments "1 These conditions being agreed to, a ministry so constituted was likely to be independent of court influence vet it was soon reproached with submission to the "interior cabinet" Mr Pitt said, "Methinks I plantly discover the traces of an overruling influence." and while he disavowed any premidice against the country of Lord Bute, he declared that "the man of that country wanted wisdom, and held principles incompatible with freedom." This supposed influence was disclaimed on the part of the government by General Conway "I see nothing of it," said he, "I feel nothing of it I disclaim it for myself, and as far as my discernment can reach, for the rest of his Majesty's

Whether Lord Bute had, at this time, any influence at count, was long a subject of doubt and controversy. It was confidently believed by the public, and by many of the best informed of his contemporaries, but Lord Bute. several years afterwards, so explicitly denied it, that his denial may be accepted as conclusive 8 The king's friends, however, had become more numerous, and acted under better discipline. Some of them held offices in the government or household, yet looked to the king for mstructions, instead of to the ministers These gene-

1 Panca drawn up by Duke of measures, either duectly or indi-Newca-tle, Rockingham Mem ,1 218 <sup>2</sup> Debate on the Address, 1766, Parl Hist, xv1 97, 101

actly, by himself or any other, from the tune when the late Duke of Cumberland was consulted in the arrangement of a ministry in 1765, arrangement of a ministy in 1763, to the present hour "— Tomline's Life of Pitt, 1 452, n See also Rockingham Mem, 1 358—360, LondBrougham's Sketchesof Statesout of watting on his Majesty, but men, Works, in 49, Edinh Rer at his levce or diawing-nour, nor cut 94, Quant Rev, exxxx 236 has he presumed to ofter any ad- Loid John Russell's Introduction

His son, Lord Mountstuart, writing Oct 23, 1773, said "Lord Bute anthouses me to say that he declares upon his solemn word of honour, he has not had the honvice of opinion concerning the distriction of offices, or the conduct of ence, axxiii

1 ally had obscure but lucrative offices, in the gift of the king himself and other members of the royal family 1 But the greater part of the king's friends were midependent members of Parhament, whom various motives had attracted to the personal support of the king Many were influenced by high notions of prerogative, - by loyalty, by confidence in the judgment and honesty of the king, and by personal attachment to his Majesty, and many by hopes of favour and advancement. They formed a distinct party, and then coherence was secured by the same causes which generally contribute to the formation of party tres But their principles and position were inconsistent with constitutional government Their services to the king were no longer confined to counsel, or political intrigue; but were organised so as to influence the deliberations of Parliament. And their organisation for such a purpose, marked a further advance in the unconstitutional policy of the court

The king continued personally to direct the measures The king's of the munsters, more particularly in the disputes parliament. with the American colonies, which, in his opinion, involved the nights and honour of his crown 2 He was resolutely opposed to the repeal of the Stamp Act, which the ministers had thought necessary for the conculation of the colonies He resisted this measure in council, but finding the ministers resolved to carry it, he opposed them in Parhament by the authorsty of his name, and by his personal influence over a considerable body of his parhamentary adherents 8 The king affected, indeed, to support the ministers, and to decline the use of his name in opposing them "Lord

<sup>1</sup> Burke's Present Discontents, this he would never consont "--

- IMBER 2 PLEASE DISCONIENTS, this he would never consont "- Works, u. 264

"The king said his munisters "Walp Mcm, u. 250, 331, n"
"Walp Mcm, u. 250, 331, n"
Rockingham Mem, n. 250, 204

Harcourt suggested, at a distance, that his Majesty might make his sentiments known, which might prevent the repeal of the act, if his ministers should push that measure The king seemed averse to that, said he would never influence people in their parliamentary opinions, and that he had promised to support his ministers" But, however the king may have affected to deprecate the use of his name, it was unquestionably used by his friends2, and while he himself admitted the unconstitutional character of such a proceeding, it found a defender in Lord Man-field In discussing this matter with the king, his lordship argued "that, though it would be unconstitutional to endeavour by his Maiesty's name to carry questions in Parhament, yet where the lawful rights of the king and Parhament were to be asserted and maintained, he thought the making his Majesty's opinion in support of those rights to be known, was fit and becoming "8 In order to counteract this secret influence, Lord Rockingham obtained the king's written consent to the passing of the bill 1

The munsters had to contend against another difficulty, which the factics of the court had created Not only were they opposed by independent members of the court party, but members holding office, upon whose support ministers were justified in relying,—were encouraged to oppose them, and retained then offices, while voting in the ranks of the Opposition. The king, who had puisshed with so much severity any opposition to measures which he approved, now upheld and protected those placemen, who opposed the ministerial measures to which

&lt;sup>1</sup> Mi Grenville's Diary, Jun 31, Mem., it 288, Rockingham Mem., 1703, Ginerville Papers, in 353 and 277, 292 and Grenville Papers, in 374, Walp

&lt;sup>3</sup> Chenville Papers, in 374, Walp
<sup>3</sup> Grenville Papers, in 374
<sup>4</sup> Rockingham Mem., 1 300

he himself objected. In vain the ministers remonstrated against their conduct the king was ready with excuses and promises, but his chosen band were safe from the indignation of the Government Nor was then opposition confined to the repeal of the Stamp Act, - a subject on which they might have affected to entertain conscientious scriples but it was vexationaly continued against the general measures of the administration 1 Well might Mi Burke term this "an opposition of a new and singular character, - an opposition of placemen and pensioners"2 Lord Rockingham protested against such a system while in office 8, and after his dismissal, took occasion to observe to his Majesty, that "when he had the honour of being in his Majesty's service, the measures of administration were thwarted and obstructed by men in office, acting like a corps, that he flattered himself it was not entirely with his Majesty's inclination, and would assure him it was very detrimental to his service" 4 This system, to use the words of Mr Burke, tended "to produce neither the security of a fiee Government, nor the energy of a monarchy that is absolute "5

The kmg, meanwhile, had resolved to overthrow the Rockingham ministry, which was on every account distanteful to him. He disapproved their liberal policy he was jenlous of their powerful party, which he desired to break up, and, above all, he resented their independence. He desired ministers to execute his will, and these men and their party were the obstaclos to the cherished object of his ambition.

Walp Mem , u. 259, 331, n ,
 Rockingham Mem , 1 250, 294, 321
 A Short Account of a Late Short Administration

Walp Mem , ii 322
 Rockingham Mem , ii 58
 Present Discontents, Works, ii

VOL I

Duke of Grafton's ministry, 1766 At length, in July, 1766, they were ungracously dismissed, and his Maje-ty now expected from the hands of Mr Pitt, an administration better stuted to his own views and policy. Mr Pitt's greatness had naturally pointed him out as the fittest man for such a task, and their were other circumstances which made him personally acceptable to the king. Haughty as was the demeanour of that distinguished man in the senate, and among his equals, his beamig in the loyal presence was lumble and obsequious. The truth of Mr Burke's well-known sareasm, that "the least peep into that closet intoxicates him, and will to the end of his life," was recognised by all his contemporaries.

A state-man with at least the outward qualities of a countin, was likely to give the king some repose after his collisions with the two list ministries. He now undertook to form an administration under the Duke of Grafton, with the office of Privy Seal, and a seat in the Upper House, as Eal of Chatham

The king's efforts to dissolve parties For another reason also Lord Chatham was acceptable to the king. They agreed, though for different reasons, in the policy of breaking up party comexions. This was now the settled object of the king, which he pursued with unceasing carnostness. In writing to tasted by the abject terms of his lettes to the king on resigning the other of Pury Seal, two years attentions of "Under this load or twan Myestr's parkon, while I supplicate again on my kaous your supplicate your thing the supplied to the unique your Minestry's north agemission to respect that flight office." 14th Ottober, 170'S, Chatham Conresp, m. 311.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Wish Meni, in 937.
<sup>2</sup> Letti to Lond Rockingham, Rockingham Meni, in 200
<sup>3</sup> Chane Processud, "that at the levée, he (*o Loid Chatham) used unhappiness, to how so low; you could see the supplication of the looked nose between his supplication green and the bestwood of Groupe II, under the bestwood of Groupe II, while it unsacring hismose—Hism. With the total while it unsacring hismose—Hism. With the total with a transcript hismose—Hism. With the total water true to his chan letter, as like the processing of the long of

Lord Chatham, July 29th, 17661, he said "I know the Earl of Chatham will zealously give his aid towards destroying all party distinctions, and restoring that subordination to government which can alone preserve that mestimable blessing, liberty, from degenerating into licentiousness." 2 Again. December 2nd. 1766. he wrote to the Earl of Chathan "To rout out the present method of parties banding together, can only be obtained by withstanding their unjust demands, as well as the engaging able men, be their private connexions where they will "8 And again, on the 25th June, 1767. "I am thoroughly resolved to encounter any difficulties rather than vield to faction "4

By this policy the king hoped to further his cherished Personal scheme of increasing his own personal influence overcome the Whig connexion, was to bring into office the friends of Lord Bute, and the court party who were subservient to his views Lord Chatham adopted the king's policy for a very different purpose Though in outward observances a courtier, he was a constitutional statesman, opposed to government by prerogative, and court influence. His career had been due to his own genius independent of party, and superior to it, he had trusted to his eloquence, his statesmanship, and popularity And now, by breaking up parties, he hoped to rule over them all His project, however, completely failed Having offended and exasperated the Wlugs, he found himself at the head of an adininistration composed of the king's friends, who thwaited him, and of discordant elements over which he had no control.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid , m 137
4 Ibid , 276 1 Introduction to vol. m of Bedford Cornesp , xxvii 2 Chatham Corresp., m 21

He discovered, when it was too late, that the kino had been more sagacious than himself.—and that while his own power and connexions had crumbled away, the court party had obtained a dangerous ascendency Parties had been broken up, and prerogative triumphed The leaders of parties had been reduced to insignificance, while the king directed public affairs according to his own will, and upon principles dangerous to public hberty According to Burke, "when he had accomplished his scheme of administration, he was no longer minister "1 To repair the mischief which had been done, he afterwards sought an alliance with the party which, when in power, he had alienated "Former little differences must be forfrom him gotten," he said, "when the contest is pro aris et focis," 2

Meanwhile, other circumstances contributed to increase the influence of the kine. Much of Lord Chatham's popularity had been sacrificed by the acceptance of a peciage, and his personal influence was dimunshed by his removal from the House of Commons, where he had been paramount. His holding so obscure a place as that of Privy Seal, also took much from his weight as a minister. His melancholy prostration soon afterwards mereased the feebleness and disunion of the administration Though his was its leading mind, for months he was incapacitated from attending to any business. He even refused an interview to the Duke of Grafton, the premier 8, and to General Conway, though commissioned by the kine to confer with him 4. It is not surprising that the Duke of Grafton should complain of the languor under which "every branch of the administration laboured from his absence" Yet the king, writing to Lord Chatham, January 23rd, 1768, to dissuade him from resigning the Privy Seal, said "Though confined to your house, your name has been sufficient to enable my administration to proceed "2 At length, however, in October, 1768, completely broken down, he resigned his office, and withdrew from the administration 8

Speech on American Taxation
 Rockingham Mem , 11- 143.

* Chatham Corresp , m 218 * Walp Mom , n 433

The absence of Lord Chatham, and the utter disorganisation of the ministry, left the king free to exercise his own influence, and to direct the policy of the country, without control Had Lord Chatham been there, the ministry would have had a policy of its own now it had none, and the Duke of Grafton and Lord North, -partly from indolence, and partly from facility, -consented to follow the stronger will of their sovereign 4

On his side, the king took advantage of the disruption of party ties, which he had taken pains to promote In the absence of distinctive principles, and party leaders, members of Parliament were exposed to the direct influence of the Crown According to Horace Walpole, "everybody ian to court, and voted for whatever the count desned"5 The main object of the king in breaking up parties, had thus been secured

On the resignation of the Duke of Grafton, the king's Lord ascendency in the councils of his ministers was further ministry, increased by the accession of Lord North to the chief 1770

m 194 2 Chatham Corrosp , nr 318 3 In his letter to the kine, October 14th, he said, "All chance of secovery will be precluded by my continuing longer to hold the Privy Seal "-Chatham Corresp, m 314 So little had Lord Chatham's ill- 111, 92.

<sup>1</sup> Letter to Lord Chatham, 8th ness been assumed for political pur-February, 1767, Chatham Corresp., poses, as it was frequently represented, that in August, 1777, he gave Lady Chatham a general letter of attorney, empowering her to transact all business for him - Chatham Cor-direction of public affaus That minister, by principle a Tory, and favourable to prenogative,—in character indolent and good tempered,—and pensonally attached to the king,—yielded up his own opinions and judgment, and for years consented to be the passive instrument of the royal will. The persecution of Wilkes, the straining of parlamentary privilege, and the coercion of America, were the deastrous fruits of the court policy. Throughout this administration, the king staked his personal credit upon the success of his measures, and regarded opposition to his ministers as an act of disloyalty, and then defeat as an affront to himself?

*esp , m 282 *Walp Mem , m 62, 67, ** 5 Ibid, n 381, n See also ibid,

In 1770, Lord Chatham stated in Parhament, that since the king's accession there had been no original ( $\iota \ \epsilon$  independent) minister  $\iota$ , and examples abound of the king's personal participation in every political event of this period

Public affans directed by the King of this period. While the Opposition were struggling to reverse the proceedings of the House of Commons against Wilkes, and Lord Chatham was about to move an address for dissolving Parliament, the king's resentiment knew no bounds. In conversations with General Conway, at this time, he declared he would abdrate his crown rather than comply with this address. "Yes," and the king, laying his hand on his sword, "I will have recourse to this, scome than yield to a dissolution of Parliament." And opinions have not been wanting, that

&lt;sup>1</sup> Walp Mem, 11 95, n, 1b, 111 100, n, Wharall Mem, 1 125 Mi Massey says, Lost Notth was "the only man of panhamentary reputation who would not hao mested" on the expaision of the kings fixed a —Hax, 1 424 Always in favour of power and authority, "he supported the king against the

austociacs, the Pathament against the people, and the nation against the colonies "—Ibid, 425 <sup>2</sup> Walp Mem, in 200 and n., iv 75

Tbid, n 94, Hansard's Pail
 Hist, vn 842 (Maich 2nd, 1770)
 14th May, 1770 Rockingham
 Mem, n, 179

the king was actually prepared to resist what he deemed an invasion of his prerogative, by military force 1

On the 26th February, 1772, while the Royal Marmage Bill was pending in the House of Lords, the kmg thus wrote to Lord North "I expect every nerve to be strained to carry the bill It is not a question relating to administration, but personally to myself, therefore I have a right to expect a hearty support from every one in my service, and I shall remember defaulters" 2 Again, on the 14th March, 1772, he wrote "I wish a list could be prepared of those that went away, and of those that deserted to the mmority (on division in the committee) That would be a rule for my conduct in the drawing-room tomonow"8 Again, in another letter, he said . "I am greatly meensed at the presumption of Charles Fox, in forcing you to vote with him last moht."4 hone you will let him know that you are not insensible of his conduct towards you "5 And the king's confidence in his own influence over the deliberations of Parliament. appears from another letter, on the 26th June, 1774, where he said "I hope the Crown will always be able, in either House of Parhament, to throw out a bill. but I shall never consent to use any expression which tends to establish, that at no time the light of the Crown to dissent is to be used." 6 .

The king not only watched how members spoke and voted7, or whether they abstained from voting8, but

Fox Mem, 1, 76, Brougham's Works, 11 79, Lord

S Lord Brougham's Works, 11 80
I th February, 1774 In proceedings against printers of a libel on the speaker, Sn F Norton

Brougham's Works, 111 84 6 Lord Brougham's Works, 111 85 7 King to Lord North, 5th April, 1770, Lord Brougham's Works, 111 71, 88, 106, 108

<sup>8</sup> King to Lord North, 12th March, 1772,6th April, 25th Oct ,1778, 28th Fox Mem. 1 99, Lord Feb. 4th and 9th March, 1779

even if they were selent, when he had expected them to speak 'No "whopper-in" from the Treasmy could have been more keen or full of expedients, in influencing the votes of members in critical divisions? He was ready, also, to take advantage of the absence of opponents. Hearing that Mr. Fox was going to Paris, he wrote to Lord North, 15th November, 1776 "Bring as much forward as you can before the recess, as real business is never so well considered as when the attention of the House is not taken up with noisy declamation."

Dismissal of officers Military officers were still exposed to marks of the king's displeasure In 1773, Lientenant-Colonel Barié and Sn Hugh Williams, both refractory members of Parlament, were pussed over in a bievet, or promotion, and Colonel Barié, in order to mark his sense of the injustice of this act of power, is signed his commission in the aimy. The king, however, appears to have modified his opinions as to his right of depriving members of military commands, on account of their conduct in Parlament. Writing to Lord North, 5th March, 1770, he says. "I am strongly of opinion that the general officers, who through Parlament have got governments, should, on opposing, lose them. This is very different from removing them from their military commands."

The king Not without many affionts, and much unpopularity,

¹ Kung to Loud North, 7th Jun, Woi 1770 "Suppused that T Townsend was silent" "King to Loid North, 10th De., 1772 "Ibid, 81 "I should think Loud G Genname night with great propriety have said a few woods to put the defence in motion"—King to Loid North, 2nd Feb, 1778. Loud Brougham's 130

Works, in 105 He was meensed against Dundas for the same reason, 24th Fib., 1778.—Hind, 108 2 King to Loid North, 6th Feb., 1775. 5th and 9th March, 1779 3 Loid Brougham's Works, in 97

Lord Brougham's Works, m 97
 Chatham Corresp, rv 243, 251
 Lord Brougham's Works, m

30,

the king and his minister long triumphed over all himself opposition in Parliament 1, but in 1778, the signal failure with Lord North's of then policy, the cass in American affairs, and the ministry impending was with France, obliged them to enter into negotiations with Lord Chatham, for the admission of that statesman and some of the leaders of Opposition into the ministry. The king needed their assistance, but was resolved not to adopt their policy He would accept them as instruments of his own will, but not as responsible ministers If their counsels should prevail, he would hunself be humiliated and disgraced

In a letter to Lord North, 15th March, 1778, the king says "Honestly, I would rather lose the crown I now wear, than bear the ignominy of possessing it under their shackles" 2 And, again, on the 17th of March, he writes "I am still ready to accept any part of them that will come to the assistance of my present efficient ministers but, whilst any ten men in the kingdom will stand by me, I will not give myself up to bondage My dear Lord, I will rather risk my crown than do what I think personally disgraceful It is impossible this nation should not stand by me If they will not, they shall have another king, for I never will put my hand to what will make me miserable to the last hour of my hife" 8 Again, on the 18th, he writes "Rather than be shackled by those desperate men (if the nation will not stand by me). I will rather see any form of government introduced into this island, and lose my crown, rather than wear it as a diserace "4 The failure of these negotiations, followed by the death

<sup>1</sup> Fox Mem , 1 115, 119 110, Fox Mem, 1 191 2 Lord Brougham's Works, m 4 Lord Brougham's Works, m

111, Fox Mem, 1 193.

108, Fox Mem, 1 189 * Lord Brougham's Works, up of Lord Chatham, left unchanged the unfortunate ad-

The king enforces his own policy

Overtures, indeed, were made to the Wlng leaders, to join a new ministry under Lord Weymouth, which were, perhaps unwisely, declined 1, and henceforth the king was resolved to admit none to his councils without exacting a pledge of compliance with his wishes Thus, on the 4th February, 1779, writing to Lord North, he says "You may now sound Lord Howe. but, before I name him to preside at the Admiralty Board, I must expect an explicit declaration that he will zealously concur in prosecuting the war in all the quarters of the globe "2 Agam, on the 22nd June, 1779, he writes "Before I will hear of any man's readmess to come into office. I will expect to see it signed under his own hand, that he is resolved to keep the empire entire, and that no troops shall consequently be withdrawn from thence (a e America), nor independence ever allowed "3

At this time it was openly avowed in the House of Commons by Lord George Germanie, that the king was his own numster, and Mi. Fox lamented "that his Majesty was his own unadvised minister." A Noi was it unnatural that the king should expect such submission from other statesmen, when his first munster was carrying out a policy of which he disapproved, but wanted resolution to resuff—and when Parhament had hitherto supported his ill-omened measures. In October, 1770, Lord North, writing to the king concerning the resignation of Lord Gowen, who was averse to the continuance of the American war, which, in his

Fox Mem, 1 207, Lod J Russell's Life of Fux, 1 193
 Lod Brouglam's Works, m. 127, Fox Mem, 1, 211, 212
 Thad 393
 Fox Mem, 1, 211, 212

opinion, "must end in rum to his Majesty and the country," says "In the argument Lord North had certamly one disadvantage, which is that he held in his heart, and has held for three years past, the same ommon as Lord Gower "1

Agam, however, the king was reduced to treat with Is forced to the Opposition, but was not less resolute in his determination that no change of ministers should affect the sition policy of his measures On December 31d, 1779, he was prevailed upon to give Lord Thurlow authority to open a negotiation with the leaders of the Opposition, and expressed his willingness "to admit into his confidence and service any men of public sprit and talents, who will join with part of the present ministry in forming one on a more enlarged scale, provided it be understood that every means are to be employed to keep the compine entire, to prosecute the present just and unprovoked was in all its branches, with the utmost vigour, and that his Majesty's past measures be treated with proper respect "2 Finding the compliance of independent statesmen less ready than he desired, he writes to Lord Thurlow, 18th December, 1779 "From the cold disdain with which I am treated, it is evident to me what treatment I am to expect from Opposition, if I was to call them into my service To obtain then support, I must deliver up my person, my principles, and my dominions into then hands"8 In other words, the king dreaded the admission of any ministers to his councils, who claimed an independent judgment upon the policy for which they would become responsible

In the meantime, the increasing influence of the Protests Crown, and the active personal exercise of its preroga-

the Crown. 1779-80 5

&lt;sup>1</sup> King's Letters to Lord North; 139, Fox Mem., 1 237 and Brougham's Works, in 151 <sup>3</sup> Lord Brougham's Works, in Lord Brougham's Works, m 151

* Lord Brougham's Works, m 140, Fox Mem, 1, 298.

tives, were attracting the attention of the people and of Parliament. In the debate on the addless at the opening of Parliament, 25th November, 1779, Mr Fox sad "He saw very early indeed, in the present reign, the plan of goven ment which had been laid down, and had since been invariably pursued in every department. It was not the mere rumour of the streets that the king was his own numster, the fatal truth was evident, and had made itself evident in every circumstance of the war carried on against America and the West Indics" in This was denied by munisters?; but evidence, not accessible to contemporaries, has since made his statement indisputable.

Early in the following year, numerous public meetings were held, associations formed, and petitions presented in favour of economic reforms, and complaning of the undue influence of the Crown, and of the patronage and corruption by which it was maintained <sup>3</sup> It was fon the rediess of these girevances that Mi Durke offered his celebrated scheme of economical reform. He confessed that the main object of this scheme was "the reduction of that corrupt influence, which is itself the perennial spring of all produgality and of all disorder,—which loads us more than minors of debt, which takes away vigour from our arms, wisdom from our councils, and every shadow of authority and credit from the most venerable parts of our constitution."

Mr Dunning's resolutions, 1780 On the 6th April, Mr Dinning moved resolutions, in a committee of the whole House, founded upon these petitions The first, which is memorable in political

&lt;sup>1</sup> Paul Hist, vx 1130

<sup>2</sup> See the speckes of the Load Advocate, the Secretary-at-Wan, and Attorney-General, ibid, 1130, 2 (published speech)

history, affirmed "that the influence of the Crown has increased, is increasing, and qualit to be diminished "1 The Lord Advocate (Mr Dundas) endeavoured to dimush the force of this resolution by the prefatory words. "that it is necessary to declare," but Mr Fox, on behalf of the Opposition, at once assented to this amendment, and the resolution was carried by a majointy of eighteen A second resolution was agreed to without a division, affirming the right of the House to correct abuses in the civil list expenditure, and every other branch of the public revenue, and also a third. affirming "that it is the duty of this House to provide. as tar as may be, an immediate and effectual redress of the abuses complained of in the petitions presented to this House" The Opposition, finding themselves in a majority, pushed forward then success. They would consent to no delay, and these resolutions were immediately ignorted and agreed to by the House debate was signalised by the opposition speech of Sir Fletcher Norton, the Speaker, who bore his personal testimony to the increased and increasing influence of the Crown 2 The king, writing to Lord North on the 11th April concerning these obnoxious resolutions. said "I wish I did not feel at whom they were personally levelled "8

The same matters were also debated, in this session, Lord Shilin the House of Loids The debate on the Earl of Shel-bune's burne's motion, February 8th, for an inquiry into the public expublic expenditure, brought out further testimonies to the influence of the Crown Of these the most remarkable was given by the Maiquess of Rockingham,

List), and Chapter VI (House of Commons)

Parl Hist, vxi 339

Sking's Letters to Lord North Civil Lord Biougham's Works, in 144 8 King's Letters to Lord North , who asserted that since the accession of the king, there had been "a fixed determination to govern this country under the forms of law, through the influence of the Crown " "Everything within and without, whether in cabmet, Parhament, or elsewhere, carned about it the most unequivocal marks of such a system the whole economy of executive government, in all its branches, proclaimed it, whether professional, debberative, or offi-The supporters of it in books, pamphlets, and newspapers, avowed it and defended it without reserve. It was early in the present reign promulged as a court axiom, 'that the power and influence of the Crown alone was sufficient to support any set of men his Majesty might think proper to call to his councils' The fact bore evidence of its truth, for through the influence of the Crown, majorities had been procured to support any men or any measures, which an administration, thus constituted, thought proper to dictate"1

Intimula. tion of D0018

This year motion afforded an occasion for the exercise of the prepagative in an arbitrary and offensive manner. in order to influence the votes of peers, and to intimidate opponents. The Marquess of Carmarthen and the Earl of Pembroke had resigned their offices in the household, in order to give an independent vote Before the former had voted, he received notice that he was dismissed from the lord heutenancy of the East Riding of the county of York2; and soon after the latter had recorded his vote, he was dismissed from the lord heutenancy of Wiltshue, -an office which had been held by his family, at different times, for centuries 3 This flagrant exercise of prerogative could not escape the

Paul Hist, xx 1346 2 Ibid, 1340

sonal orders of the king, who wrote Opposition," to Lord North, 10th Feb , 1780 "I <sup>2</sup> Ilud, 1340 cannot choose the heutenancy of <sup>5</sup> Ilus dismissal was by the per- Wiltshire should be in the hands of notice of Parhament, and on the 6th March, Lord Shelburne moved an address praying the king to acquaint the House whether he had been advised, and by whom, to dismiss these peers "from their employments, for then conduct in Parliament" The motion was negatived by a large majority; but the unconstitutional acts of the king were strongly condemned in debate, and again animadversions were made upon the influence of the Crown, more especially in the administration of the army and militia 1

On the meeting of Parliament, on the 27th Novem-complaints of the ber, 1781, amendments were moved in both Houses, in influence answer to the king's speech, which gave occasion to the of the Crown. expression of strong opinions regarding the influence of 1781 the Crown, and the megular and mesponsible system under which the government of the country was conducted The Duke of Richmond said, "that the country was governed by clerks,-each minister confining himself to his own office, - and consequently, instead of responsibility, union of opinion, and concerted measures. nothing was displayed but dissension, weakness, and corruption" The "interior cabinet," he declared, had been the min of this country? The Marquess of Rockingham described the system of government pursued since the commencement of the reign as "a proscriptive system, - a system of favouritism and secret influence"8 Mr Fox imputed all the defeats and disasters of the American War to the influence of the

Chown 4 The king was never diverted by defeat and disaster First overfrom his resolution to maintain the war with America but the House of Commons was now determined upon Nosth's ministry peace, and a struggle ensued which was to decide the fate of the minister, and to overcome, by the power of Panlament, the stubbon will of the king. On the 22nd February, 1782, General Conway moved an address deprecating the continuance of the war, but was defeated by a majority of one. On the 27th, he proposed anothen address with the same object. Lord North begged for a short respite but an adjournment being refused by a majority of numbern, the motion was agreed to without a division.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Pail Hist, vxi 218 2 Ibid , xxn 651

&lt;sup>3</sup> Ibid, 655 1 Ibid, 706

On the receipt of the king's answer, General Conway moved a resolution that "the House will consider as enemies to the king and country all who shall advise, or by any means attempt, the further prosecution of offensive war, for the purpose of reducing the revolted colonies to obedience by force " 8 In reply to this proposal, Lord North astomshed the House by announcing, - not that he proposed to resign on the reversal of the policy, to which he was pledged, - but that he was prepared to give effect to the instructions of the House! Mr Fox repudiated the principle of a minister remaining in office, to carry out the policy of his opponents, against his own judgment, and General Conway's resolution was agreed to Lord North, however, persevered with his propositions for peace, and declared his determination to retain office until the king should command him to resign, or the House should point out to him, in the clearest manner, the propriety of withdrawing 4 No time was lost in pressing him with the latter alternative On the 8th March, a motion of Lord John Cavendish, changing all the misfortunes of the war upon the meompetency of the ministers, was lost by a majority of ten 1 On the 15th, Sir J Rous moved that "the House could no louger repose confidence in the present ministers," and lus motion was negatived by a majority of nine 2 On the 20th the assault was about to be repeated, when Lord North announced his resignation 8

&lt;sup>1</sup> Parl. Hist, xxii 1028 <sup>2</sup> Ibid, 1061

&lt;sup>5</sup> 4th March Ibid, 1007
<sup>4</sup> Ibid, 1107

The king had watched this struggle with great anxiety, The king's as one personal to himself Writing to Lord North on the fits of the 17th March, after the motion of Sir J Rous, he his minissaid "I am resolved not to throw myself into the hands of the Opposition at all events; and shall certainly, if things go as they seem to tend, know what my conscience as well as honour dictates, as the only way left for me "4 He even desired the royal yacht to be prepared, and talked as if nothing were now left for him but to retue to Hanover 5 But it had become impossible to retain any longer in his service that "confidential minister." whom he had "always treated more as his friend than muuster "6 By the carnest solicitations of the king". Lord North had been induced to retain office against his own wishes he had persisted in a policy of which he disapproved, and when forced to abandon it, he still held his ground, in order to protect the king from the intrusion of those whom his Majesty regarded as personal enemies 8 He was now fauly driven from his post, and the king appreciating the personal devotion of

VOL I

Paul Hist, xxn 1114

<sup>2</sup> Ibid, 1170 3 Ibid, 1214 4 Fox Mem, 1 288, King's Letters to Lord North 5 Fox Mem, 1 287 (Lord Holland's text) 6 King to Lord North, 2nd June,

<sup>7</sup> King's Letters to Lord North, 31st Jan, 17th, 22nd, 23id, 29th

and 30th March, 8th April, May 6th, 26th, &c, 1778, 30th Nov, 1779, 19th May, 1780, 19th March, <sup>1782</sup> <sup>8</sup> On the 19th March, 1782, the very day before he announced his mtention to resign, the king wrote "If you resign before I have decided what to do, you will certainly for even forfert my regard "

his minister, rewarded his zeal and fidelity with a muinficent present from the privy purse 1

The king's mfluenco dnung Lord North's ministry

The king's correspondence with Lord North2 gives us a remarkable insight into the relations of his Majesty with that minister, and with the government of the country Not only did he duect the minister in all important matters of foreign and domestic policy, but he instructed him as to the management of debates in Parliament, suggested what motions should be made or opposed, and how measures should be carried Heroserved to himself all the patronage, - he airanged the entire cast of the administration .- settled the relative places and pretensions of ministers of state, of law officers. and members of his household, -- nominated and promoted the English and Scotch judges, - appointed and translated bishops, nominated deans, and dispensed other preferments in the Church 8 He disposed of military governments, regiments, and commissions, and himself ordered the marching of troops 4 He gave or refused titles, honours, and pensions 5 All his directions were peremptory. Louis the Great him self could not have been more royal -he enjoyed the consciousness of power, and felt himself "every inch a king"

Results of the king's policy

But what had been the result of twenty years of kingci aft? Whenever the king's personal influence had

<sup>1</sup> The king, in his letter to Loid the appointment of the poet Gray North, says "Allow me to assist to the professional of Modern Hisyou with 10,0007, 15,0007, or even 20,000/, it that will be sufficient" -Lord Brougham's Life of George III, Works, u. 18 Mi Adolphus states, from private information, that the present amounted to 30,000/ <sup>2</sup> Appendix to Lord Brougham's Life of Lord North, Works, in J Much to his credit, he secured councillor tory at Cambridge, 8th March, 1771 25th October, 1775 "On the receipt of your letter, I have ordered Elhott's dragoons to march from Henley to Hounslow"

5 "Wo must husband honours," wrote the king to Lord North on the 18th July, 1777, on refusing to make Sir W. Hamilton a privy-been the greatest, there had been the fiercest turbulence and discontent amongst the people, the most signal failures in the measures of the Government, and the heaviest disasters to the State. Of all the evil days of England during this king's long reign, the worst are recollected in the ministries of Lord Bute, Mr Grenville, the Duke of Grafton, and Lord North. Nor had the royal will, -- however potential with ministers, -- prevailed in the government of the country He had been thwaited and humbled by his parhaments, and insulted by demagogues parhamentary privilege, which he had sought to uphold as boldly as his own prerogative, had been defied and overcome by Wilkes and the printers the liberty of the press, which he would have restrained, had been provoked into licentiousness, and his kingdom had been shorn of some of its fairest provinces.

On the retirement of Lord North, the king submitted, Rockingwith a bad grace, to the Rockingham administration. ham main He found places, indeed, for his own friends · but the policy of the cabinet was as distasteful to him as were the persons of some of the statesmen of whom it was composed Its first principle was the concession of independence to America, which he had so long resisted; the second was the reduction of the mfluence of the Chown, by the abolition of offices, the exclusion of contractors from Parliament, and the disfranchisement of revenue officers 1 Shortly after its formation, Mr Fox, writing to Mr Fitzpatrick (28th April, 1782), said. "Provided we can stay in long enough to give a good stout blow to the influence of the Crown, I do not think it much signifies how soon we go out after "2 This ministry was constituted of materials not likely to unite,-of men who had supported the late ministry, and of the leaders of the parliamentary opposition, - or, as Mr Fox expressed it, "it consisted of two parts, one belonging to the king, the other to the public "1 Such men could not be expected to act condually together, but they aimed their blow at the influence of the Crown by passing the Contractors' Bill, the Revenue Officers' Bill, and a bill for the reduction of offices 2 They also suffered the former policy of the court to be stigmatised, by expunging from the journals of the House of Commons, the obnoxious resolutions which had affirmed the disability of Wilkes istry promoting such measures as these, was naturally viewed with distrust and ill-will by the court hard was the struggle between them, that the surly Chancellor, Lord Thurlow,-who had retained his office by the express desire of the king, and voted against all the measures of the Government, - affirmed that Lord Rockingham was "bringing things to a pass where either his head of the king's must go, in order to settle which of them is to govern the country"8 The king was described by his Tory friends as a prisoner in the hands of his ministers, and represented in the caricatures of the day, as being put in fetters by his gaolers 4 In the same spirit the ministers were termed the "Regency." as if they had assumed to exercise the royal authority In a few months, however, this ministry was on the point of breaking up, in consequence of differences of ommon and personal jealousies, when the death of Lord Rockingham dissolved it

Lord Shelburne's manistry 1st July, 1782 Mi Fox and his friends retired, and Loid Shelburne, who had represented the king in the late cabinet, was placed at the head of the new administration, while Mi

&lt;sup>1</sup> Fox Mem, 1 202. <sup>2</sup> See Chapter VI

Fox Mem , 1 204
 Rockingham Mem , 11 400,

William Pitt now first entered office, though little more than twenty-three years of age, as Chancellor of the Exchequer 1 The secession of the popular party restored the king's confidence in his ministers, who now attempted to govern by his influence, and to maintain their position against a formidable combination of parties. Horace Walpole represents Lord Shelburne as "trusting to maintain himself entirely by the king," 2 and such was the state of parties that, in truth, he had httle else to nely upon In avoying this influence, he artfully defended it, in the spirit of the king's friends, by retorting upon the great Whig families He would never consent, he said, "that the King of England should be a King of the Mahrattas, for among the Mahrattas the custom is, it seems, for a certain number of great lords to elect a Peishwah, who is thus the creature of the aristograey, and is vested with the pleurtude of power, while their king is, in fact, nothing more than a loval pageant " 8

By breaking up parties, the king had hoped to combinisecure his independence and to enlarge his influence, the granist but now he was startled by a result which he had the king not anticipated "Divide et impera" had been his maxim, and to a certain extent it had succeeded Separation of parties had enfeebled their opposition to his government, but now their sudden combination overthrew it When the preliminary articles of peace with America were laid before Parliament, the parties of Loid North and Mr Fox, -so long opposed to each other, and "The Conwhose political hostility had been embittered by the most acrimonious disputes,-formed a "Coalition," and 17th and outvoted the Government in the House of Commons 4 21st Feb.,

&lt;sup>1</sup> Tomline's Life of Pitt, 1 86 2 Fox Mem , n. 11.

<sup>3</sup> Pail Hist, vxii 1003

<sup>4</sup> Lord Auckland's Cor , 1 9, 41

Overbone by numbers, the numster resigned, and the king alone continented this powerful Coulition. The struggle which ensued was one of the most critical in our modern constitutional history. The prerogatives of the Crown on the one side, and the powers of Parliament on the other, were more strained than at any time since the Revolution. But the strong will of the king, and the courage and address of his youthful councillor, Mr. Pitt, prevailed. They carried the people with them, and the ascendency of the Crown was established for many years, to an extent which even the king himself could scarcely have ventured to hope

The leaders of the Coalition naturally expected to succeed to power: but the king was resolved to resist then pretensions He sought Mr Pitt's assistance to form a government, and with such a minister would have braved the united forces of the Opposition But that sagacious statesman, though not yet twenty-four years of age1, had taken an accurate survey of the state of parties. and of public opinion; and seeing that it was not yet the time for putting himself in the front of the battle, he resisted the solicitations of his Majesty, and the advice of his friends, in order to await a more fitting opportunity of serving the king 2 In vain did the king endeavour once more to disunte the Coalition, by making separate proposals to Lord North and the Duke of Portland The new confederacy was not to be shaken .-- and theking found himself at its mercy Itwas long, however, before he would submit He wrote to Lord Weymouth "to desire his support against his new tyrants," and " told the Lord Advocate that sooner than yield he would go to Hanover, and had even prevailed upon the Queen to consent" From this resolution he was probably dissuaded by the rough counsels of Lord Thurlow "Your Majesty may go," said he; "nothing is more easy, but you may not find it so easy to return, when your Majesty becomes tired of staying there." It was not until the country had been for seventeen days without a government, that the king agreed to Lord North's scheme of a Coalition ministry But further difficulties were raised: and at length the House of Commons interposed After several debates, in one of which Mr Fox accused the 23rd king's secret friends of breaking off the negotiation, Mach, the House addressed his Majesty to form " an administration entitled to the confidence of his people" The ad- 24th these was graciously answered, but still no ministry was Maich, Agam the king pressed Mr Pitt to become his premier, who again firmly and finally refused 1 At Coulition length, after an extraordinary interval of thirty-seven Ministry, days, from the 24th February to the 2nd April, the Coalition ministry was completed, under the Duke of Portland.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Mr Pitt was born 28th May, <sup>3</sup> Fox Mem, ri 42 (Hoiace Wal-1759. <sup>3</sup> Tentline's Lafe of Pitt. 1 140.

Such are the vicissitudes of political life, that Lord Efforts of North, who for years had been the compliant and ob- the Coalisequious minister of the king, was now forcing his strain the way into office, in alliance with Mi Fox, the king's fluence most dieaded opponent, and lately his own While the king was yet holding them at bay, the new friends were concerting measures for restraining his future influence As no one had submitted to that influence so readily as Lord North, we cannot intrude into their secret conferences without a smile. Mr Fox insisted that the king should not be suffered to be his own minister, to which Loid Noith iephed "If you mean there should not be a government by departments, I agies with you I think it a very bad system. There should be one man, or a cabinet, to govern the whole, and direct every measure. Government by departments was not brought in by me. I found it so, and had not the vigour and resolution to put an end to it. The king ought to be treated with all sort of respect and attention, but the appearance of power is all that a king of this country can have. Though the government in my time was a government by departments, the whole

The king's opposition to his min-

But whatever were the views of ministers regarding the king's future authority, he himself had no intention of submitting to them He did not attempt to disguise his repugnance to the ministry which had been forced upon him, but gave them to understand that they need expect no support from him, and that he would not create any peers upon their recommendation He told Lord Temple "that to such a ministry he never would give his confidence, and that he would take the first moment for dismissing them "2 The Coalition had not found favour in the country, and no pams were spared, by the king's friends, to increase its unpopularity. Meanwhile the king watched all the proceedings of his ministers with jealousy, criticised their policy, and assumed towards them an attitude of opposition Thus, writing to Mt. Fox, who, as Secretary of State, was negotiating the peace, in August, 1783, he said. "I cannot say that I am so surprised at France not putting the last strokes to the definitive treaty as soon as we may wish, as our having totally disagned, in addition to the extreme anxiety shown for peace, during the whole period that has ensued, since the end of February. 1782, certainly makes her feel that she can have no reason to apprehend any evil from so slighting a moceeding "1

&lt;sup>1</sup> Fox Mem , n. 38

&lt;sup>2</sup> Court and Cabinets of Guorge

An opportunity soon arose for more active hos- Mr Foxs tility Mr Fox's India Bill had been brought into the India Bill, House of Commons, and, in spite of the most strenuous opposition, was being rapidly passed by large majorities It was denounced as unconstitutional, and as an invasion of the prerogatives of the Crown, but no means had been found to stay its progress The king now concerted with his friends a bold and unscrippulous plan for defeating the bill, and overthrowing his ministers His name was to be used, and an active Use of the canvass undertaken by his authority, against the king sname against it measure of his own ministers Though this plan was agreed upon eight days before the bill reached the House of Lords, it was cautiously concealed To arrest the progress of the bill in the Commons was hopeless: and the interference of the Crown, in that House, would have excited dangerous resentment. The blow was therefore to be struck in the other House, where it would have greater weight, and be attended with less danger 2 Lord Temple, - who had suggested the plan, in concert with Lord Thurlow, and to whom its execution was intrusted, -after an audience with his Matesty, declared himself authorised to protest against the bill in the king's name And in order to leave no doubt as to his commission, the following words were written upon a card -<sup>1</sup> Fox Mem , n 141.

2 Court and Cabmets of George III , 1, 288, 280

"His Mujesty allows Earl Temple to say, that whoever voted for the Indaa Bill, was not only not his friend, but would be considered by him as an enemy, and if these words were not strong enough, Earl Temple might use whatever words he might deem stoneen, and more to the purpose."

With these credentails, Lord Temple proceeded to cauvass the peers,—with what success was soon apparent On the first reading, supported by Lord Thurlow and the Duke of Richmond, he gave the signal of attack The peers assumed a threatening attatude, and on the 15th December, placed the immistes in a minority, on a question of adjournment — Little secrecy of reserve was maintained by the king's friends, who took caue to proclaim his Majesty's wishes. The true made of the king's name was noticed by the Duke of Portland, the Duke of Richmond, and Earl Fitzwilliam, and was not denied by Lord Temple <sup>8</sup>

Mr Fitzpatrick, writing to Loid Ossory, on the 15th December, said "The proxies of the king's friends are arrived against the bill The public is full of alarm and astomshment at the treachery, as well as the impudence, of this unconstitutional interference. Nobody guesses what will be the consequences of a conduct that is generally compared to that of Charles I., in 1641."

Declarion of the Commons endeavoured to arrest them On plotte, the Commons endeavoured to arrest them On the Toth December, Mr. Bakea, after denouncing secret advice to the Crown, against its responsible

Court and Cabinets of George III, 1288, 289, Fox Mem, n. 253 Many of them withdraw then proxies from the ministers a few hours before the meeting of the House—Pail Hist, XXIV, 211

<sup>* 15</sup>th Dec, 1783, Paul Hist, xxiv 151—160, Tomline's Life of Pitt, 1 232, Rose Corresp, 1 47, Loid Auckland's Corresp, 1 67.
+ Fox Mem, 11, 220.

numsters, and the use of the king's name, moved a 17th Dec, 1csolution, "that it is now necessary to declare, that to 17th Dec, 1cport any opinion, or pretended opinion, of his Majesty, upon any bill, or other proceeding, depending in either House of Panhament, with a view to influence the votes of the members, is a high cime and misdemeanour, decogatory to the honour of the Crown,— a breach of the fundamental purtleges of Panhament, and subversive of the constitution "1".

In your did Mr. Pitt contend that the House could not deal with 1 mours, and that the hereditary councillors of the Crown had always a right to give advice to their sovereign. Mr Fox replied in a masterly speech, full of constitutional arguments, and eloguent with indiguant remonstrances 2. The resolution was voted by a majority of 153 to 80 The House then resolved to go into committee on the state of the nation, on the following Monday. But this was not enough It was evident that the king had determined upon a change of ministers, and lest he should also attempt to overthrow the obnoxious majority by a sudden dissolution, the House, on the motion of Mi Eisking, agreed to a resolution affirming the necessity of considering a suitable remedy for abuses in the government of the British dominions in the East Indies, and declaims "that this House will consider as an enemy to his country, any person who shall mesume to advise his Majesty to prevent, or in any

&lt;sup>1</sup> Com Journ, XXXIX 812, Pail Hist, XXIV 199 <sup>2</sup> Mi Fox cited the words re-

&lt;sup>2</sup> M<sub>1</sub> Fox cited the words reported to have been used by Lord Temple, and challenged a contradiction, upon which M<sub>1</sub> W Grenville said, he was authorised by his

noble relative to say that he had never made use of those words This demal, as Mr Fox observed, amounted to nothing more than that these had not been the precise words used — Parl Hist, xxiv 207, 225 manner interrupt, the discharge of this important duty "1

The India Bill lost, and ministers dismissed.

The strange spectacle was here exhibited, of a king plotting against his own ministers,—of the ministers invershing against the conduct of their loyal master,of the House of Commons supporting them, and condemning the king, and of the king defying at once his ministers and the House of Commons, and trusting to his influence with the Peers. The king's tactics prevailed On the very day on which the Commons agreed to these strong remonstrances against his interference, it was crowned with complete success. The bill was rejected by the House of Loids 2, and the next day the king followed up his advantage, by at once dismissing his ministers 3 To make this dismissal as contemptuous as possible, he sent a message to Lord North, and Mr Fox, commanding them to return then seals by their under-secretaries, as an audience would be disagreeable to his Majesty 4 Earl Temple, who had done the king this service, was entrusted with the seals for the purpose of formally dismissing the other ministers the man who had been the king's chief agent in defeating them, was chosen to offer them this last insult But the battle was not yet won

Mr Pitt as premier, 1783

The king had struck down his ministers, though supported by a vast majority of the House of Commons he had now to support a muster of his own choice against that majority, and to overcome it Mr Pitt no longer hesitated to take the post of trust and danger, which the such meanness on the part of his filends in the House of Lords, as one could not expect either from him or them "-For Mem , 11 221.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Pul Hist, xxiv 226 <sup>2</sup> 17th Dec, 1783 By a majority of 19 —Pal Hist, xxiv 196

<sup>5</sup> Mr Fox, writing immediately afterwards, said "We are beat in the House of Lords by such trea-

the House of Lords by such trea-chery on the part of the king, and line's Lafe of Pitt, 1 230

king at once conferred upon him. His time had now come, and he resolved to give battle to an angry ma-1011ty .-- under leaders of great talents and experience. -smarting under defeat, and full of resentment at the unconstitutional means by which they had been overthrown He accepted the offices of Frist Lord of the Treasury and Chancellor of the Exchequer, and the king's sturdy friend, Lord Thurlow, was reinstated as Lord Chancellor Mr Pitt had also relied upon the assistance of Earl Temple , whose zeal in the king's service was much needed in such a crisis, but that nobleman resigned the seals a few days after he had received them, assigning as his reason a desire to be free to answer any charges against him, arising out of his recent conduct 2

The contest which the youthful premier had now Opposition to conduct, was the most arduous that had ever devolved in the Comupon any minister, since the accession of the House of Hanover So overpowering was the majority against him, that there seemed scarcely a hope of offering it an effectual resistance. His opponents were so confident of success, that when a new writ was moved for Appleby, on his acceptance of office, the motion was received with shouts of densive laughter 8 And while the presumption of the boy-minister was ridiculed, the strongest measines were immediately taken to deprive him of his authority, and to intimidate the court, whose policy he supported Many of Mr Pitt's advisers, despaning of his prospects with the present Parliament, counselled an immediate

House of Loids -Tombne's Life of Pitt, 1 232

<sup>2</sup> Parl Hist, xxiv 237 <sup>3</sup> Tomline's Life of Pitt, 1 237

<sup>4</sup> Pitt, to use the happy phrase of Eiskine, was "hatched at once

&lt;sup>1</sup> He was intended to lead the onse of Lords—Tombine's Life of own ambition"—Pal Hist, xiv 277 In the Rolliad, his youth was thus reduculed ---

&quot; A sight to make surrounding nations at ire,-A kingdom trusted to a schoolboy a care "

dissolution but he same consummate judgment and foreaght which, a few months eather, had induced him to decline office, because the time was not yet inpe for action, now led him to the conviction that he must convert public opinion to his side, before he appealed to the people. Though standing alone,—without the aid of a single cabinet immster, in the House of Commons?—he resolved, under every disadvantage, to meet the assaults of his opponents on their own ground, and his talents, his courage and resources ultimately won a signal victory

Attempts to prevent a dissolution 19th Dec,

Secure of their present majority, the first object of the Opposition was to prevent a dissolution, which they believed to be impending. The day after the dismissal of the late ministers, the Opposition insisted on the postponement of the third reading of the Land-tax Bill for two days, in order, as Mr Fox avowed, that it might not "go out of their hands until they should have taken such measures as would guard against the evils which might be expected from a dissolution "8 On the 22nd December, the House went into committee on the state of the nation, when Mr Erskine moved an address to the Crown, representing "that alarming rumours of an intended dissolution of Parliament have gone forth," that "inconveniences and dangers" were "likely to follow from a protogation or dissolution of the Parhament in the present arduous and entical comunction of affans," and beseeching his Majesty "to suffer his faithful Commons to proceed on the business of the session, the furtherance of which is so essentially necessary to the prosperity of the public, and that his Majesty will be graciously pleased to hearken to the advice of his faithful Commons, and not to the secret

&lt;sup>1</sup> Tomline's Lafe of Pitt, 1 241, <sup>2</sup> Ibid, 1 236 242 <sup>3</sup> Pail Hist, xxiv 230

advices of particular persons, who may have private interests of their own, separate from the true interests of his Majesty and his people"! Notwithstanding assurances that Mr Pitt had no intention of advising a dissolution, and would not consent to it if advised by others, the address was agreed to, and presented to the king by the whole House In his answer the king assured them that he would "not interrupt their meeting by any exercise of his prerogative, either of prorogation of dissolution "2 This assurance, it was observed. merely referred to the meeting of Parliament after the Christmas recess, and did not remove the apprehensions of the Opposition. On the 24th December, a resolution was agreed to, that the Treasury ought not to consent to the acceptance of any more bills from India, until it should appear to the House that there were sufficient means to meet them 8

These strong measures had been taken in Mr Pitt's 12th Jan, absence, and on his return to the House, after Christmas, <sup>1784</sup> the Opposition resumed their offensive attitude Mr Fox went so far as to refuse to allow Mr Pitt to dehver

the House, at once moved the order of the day for the committee on the state of the nation

In the debate which ensued, the Opposition attempted to extoit a piomise that Pailiament should not be dissolved, but Mr Pitt said he would not "presume to compromise the royal preogrative, or bargain it away in the House of Commons". This debate was signalised by the declaration of General Ross that he haal been sent for by a Lord of the Bedchamber, and told that if he voted against the new administration

a message from the king, and being in possession of

<sup>1</sup> Paul Hist, xxiv 246 The 2 Hold, 264 as paragraph of the address was taken from an address to William 1914 4 Hold, 294

on the 12th January, he would be considered as an enemy to the king 1 Being unable to obtain any pledge from the minister, the Opposition at once addressed themselves to devise effectual obstacles to an early dissolution The House resolved itself into the committee on the state of the nation, at half-past two in the morning, - by a majority of forty against the ministers.-- when Mi Fox immediately moved a resolution, which was agreed to without a division, declaring it to be a high crime and misdemeanor to issue, after a dissolution or prorogation, money voted for any service which had not been appropriated to such service by Parliament 2 He then moved for "accounts of the several sums of money issued, or ordered to be issued, from the 19th December, 1783, to the 14th January, 1784, inclusive. to any person or persons towards" naval, ordnance, army, or civil services, "or in any other manner whatever, for and towards services voted in the present session of Parliament, but not appropriated by any act of Parliament to such services" He also proposed to add, "that no moneys should be issued for any public service, till that return was made, nor for three days afterwards," but withdrew this motion, on being assured that it would be attended with inconvenience He further obtained the postponement of the Mutany Bill until the 23rd February, which still left time for its passing before the expiration of the Annual Mutiny Act

Resolution agamst 155ue of money unappropriated by Parliament

Earl of Surrey's resolutions These resolutions were followed by another, pro-

<sup>1</sup> Paul Hist, xxiv 205, 299 In Tomline, who states that the Ap-propriation Act of 1784 included the supplies of the pievious session, <sup>2</sup> Com Journ AXXIX 858 These without any opposition being offened grants were re-voted in the next — Life of Patt, 1 507, 24 Geo III, Parliament, - a fact overlooked by Sess n c 24, Com Journ, xxxiv posed by the Earl of Surrey, "That in the present situation of his Majesty's dominions, it is pecuhally necessary that there should be an administration which has the confidence of this House and the public" This being carried, he proceeded to another, "That the late changes in his Majesty's councils were immediately preceded by dangerous and universal reports, that his Majesty's sacred name had been unconstitutionally abused to affect the deliberations of Parhament, and that the appointments made were accompanied by circumstances new and extraordinary. and such as do not conciliate or engage the confidence of this House"

All these resolutions were reported immediately and agreed to, and the House did not adjourn until halfpast seven in the morning 1

Two days afterwards the attack was renewed A Resoluresolution was carried in the committee, "That the continuance of the present ministers in trusts of the highest want of conimportance and responsibility, is contrary to consti- 14th Jan tutional principles, and injurious to the interests of his Majesty and his people "2 The Opposition accused the minister of reviving the distracted times before the Revolution, when the House of Commons was generally at variance with the Crown, but he Jan 23rd listened to their remonstrances with indifference He brought in his India Bill it was thrown out after the second reading. Again, he was goaded to declare his intentions concerning a dissolution, but to the indignation of his opponents, he maintained silence length, on the 26th January, he declared that, in the present situation of affairs, he should not advise a dis-

Paul Hist, xxiv, 317

<sup>2</sup> Ibid, 361

solution At the same time, he said that the appointment and removal of munsters did not rest with the House of Commons, and that as his resignation would be injurious to the public service, he still intended to retain office The House passed a resolution affirming that they rehed upon the king's assurances, that the consideration of the affaus of the East India Company should not be interrupted by a prorogation or dissolu-

Attempts to unite marties

Meanwhile, several influential members were endeavouring to put an end to this unsettled state of affairs. by effecting an union of the ministerial and opposition parties With this view, on the 2nd February, General Grosvenor moved a resolution "That the present arduous and critical situation of public affairs requires the exertion of a firm, efficient, extended, united administration, entitled to the confidence of the people. and such as may have a tendency to put an end to the unfortunate divisions and distractions of this country "1 This being carried, was immediately followed by another, proposed by Mr Coke of Norfolk "That the continuance of the present ministers in their offices, is an obstacle to the formation of such an administration as may enjoy the confidence of this House" was agreed to, on a division 2 As these resolutions had no more effect than any previous votes, in shaking the firmness of the minister, they were ordered, on the following day, to be laid before his Majesty.

The House of Lords Ling

The House of Lords now came to the aid of the support the king and his minister. On the 4th February, the Earl of Effingham moved two resolutions The first, having reference to the vote of the House of Commons on the

<sup>1</sup> Parl Hist, xxiv 451

&lt;sup>2</sup> By 223 against 204.

24th December as to the acceptance of bills from India. affirmed, "That an attempt in any one branch of the legislature to suspend the execution of law by sepaately assuming to itself the direction of a discretionary power, which, by an act of Parliament, is vested in any body of men, to be exercised as they shall judge expedient, is unconstitutional" The second was that "The undoubted authority of appointing to the great offices of executive government is solely vested in his Majesty, and that this House has every reason to place the firmest reliance on his Majesty's wisdom, in the exercise of this prerogative" The first was carried by a majority of forty-seven, the second was agreed to without a division. They were followed by an address to the king, assuring him of their Lordships' support in the exercise of his undoubted prerogative, and of their rehance upon his wisdom in the choice of his ministers To this address he returned an answer, "that he had no object in the choice of ministers, but to call into his service men the most deserving of the confidence of his Parliament, and of the public in general "1

To these proceedings the Commons replied by m- Retort of specting the Lords' Journal for their obnoxious resolutions,---by searching for precedents of the usage of Parliament,-and, finally, by declaring that the House had not assumed to suspend the execution of law,and that they had a right to declare their opinion respecting the exercise of every discretionary power, and particularly with reference to public money. They justified their previous votes, and asserted their determination to maintain their own privileges, while they avoided any encroachment on the rights of either of the other branches of the legislature

Paul Hist, axiv 525. See also Lord Auckland's Corr, 1 74

Postponement of the supplies

the resolutions which the Commons had laid before the king When this was noticed, Mr Pitt was silent', and at length, on the 10th February, on the report of the ordnance estimates. Mr Fox said that the House could not vote supplies, until they knew what answer they were to receive Mr Pitt engaged that the House should be informed what line of conduct his Majesty intended to pursue, and the report, instead of being agreed to, was recommitted On the 18th, Mr Pitt acquainted the House "that his Majesty had not vet, in compliance with the resolutions of the House. thought proper to dismiss his present ministers, and that his Majestv's ministers had not resigned "2" This announcement was regarded as a defiance of the House of Commons, and again the supplies were postponed though the leaders of the Opposition disclaimed all intention of refusing them On the 20th, another resolution and an address were voted 8, expressing rehance upon the royal wisdom to remove "any obstacle to the formation of such an administration as the House has Further addresses to the king of Commons, and again the supplies were postponed though the leaders of the Opposition disclaimed all intention of refusing them. On the 20th, another resolution and an address were voted $\frac{3}{2}$ expressing relanice upon the royal wisdom to remove "any obstacle to the formation of such an administration as the House has declared to be requisite." The address was presented by the whole House. The king replied, that he was anxious for a firm and united administration, but that no charge had been suggested against his present ministers, that numbers of his subjects had expressed satisfaction at the late changes in lus councils, and that the Commons could not expect the executive offices to be vacated, until such a plan of union as they had pointed out, could be carried into effect. This answer

&lt;sup>1</sup> Feb 9th, Pail Hist, XIV proposed to his supporters to move an address immediately afterwards, which was agreed to at five o'clock in themorphic

vision or the resolution, Mr Fox + Parl Hist, xxiv. 677

was appointed to be considered on the 1st March, to which day the House adjourned, without entering upon any other business, and thus again the supplies were postponed On the motion of Mr Fox, the House then presented a further address to the king, submitting "that the continuance of an administration which does not possess the confidence of the representatives of the people, must be miurious to the public service," and praying for its removal Mr Fox maintained it to be without precedent for a ministry to hold office, in defiance of the House of Commons M1 Pitt 1ctorted that the history of this country afforded no example of a ministry being called upon to retire untried, and without a cause The king, in his reply, took up the same ground, and affirming that no charge, complaint, or specific objection had yet been made against any of his ministers, again declined to dismiss them. And thus stood the king and his ministers on one side, and the House of Commons on the other, arrayed in hostile attitude,-each party standing firmly on its constitutional rights . the one active and offensive, - the other patiently waiting to strike a decisive blow

The Mutiny Bill was now postponed for some days, as its passing was expected to be the signal for an immediate dissolution, and one more effort was made to drive the ministers from office. On the 8th March, "a representation" to the king was moved by Mr Fox', to testify the surprise and affliction of the House on receiving his Majesty's answer to their last address,—resterating all their, previous statements,—comparing the conduct and principles of nate reigns of the Stuarts,-justifying the withholding of their confidence from ministers without prefer-11ng any charge, as it was their removal and not then punishment which was sought,-and taking credit to themselves for their forbearance, in not withholding the supplies 1 This was the last struggle of the Opposition When their encounters with the ministry began, their majority was nearly two to one This great disproportion soon diminished, though it was still, for a time, considerable. On the 12th January their majority was fifty-four; on the 20th February it was reduced to twenty On the 1st March it fell to twelve on the 5th it was only nine, and now, on this last occasion, it dwindled to one. The parhamentary contest was at an end The king and his ministers had triumphed, and were about to appeal from Parhament to the people The Mutany Bill was passed, - large supplies were voted rapidly, but not appropriated. on the 24th March Parliament was prorogued, and on the following day dissolved

&lt;sup>1</sup> On this occasion strangers were gaining admission to the gallety for oxcluded, at the instance of Sin a friend. The debate is not theremanes Lowthet, who had failed in fore fully upopoted.

Frank . trumph of the minis-Lors.

Reflections on this atruggle

While this contest was being carried on in Parliament. the contending parties were not idle out of doors The king, who rushed into it with so much boldness, had not been prepared for the alarming demonstrations of Parhament If the minister of his choice had now been driven from power, he would have been prostrate before the Coahtaon This danger was at first imminent, and the king awaited it with dismay Defeat in such a contest would have been humiliating and disgraceful Believing that he could be "no longer of utility to this country, nor could with honour continue in this island," he repeated his threats of retiring to Hanover, rather than submit to what he deemed the destruction of his kingly power 1 From such extremities, however, he was relieved by the declining numbers of his opponents, and the increasing influence and popularity of his own cause The Coalition, though powerful in Pauliament, by means of a combination of parties, had never been popular in the country. While in power they had been exposed to continual obloquy, which was redoubled after their dismissal. The new ministers and the court party. taking advantage of this feeling, represented Mr Fox's India Bill as an audacious attempt to interfere with the piciogatives of the Ciown, and its authors as enemies of the king and constitution The loyalty of the people was aroused, and they soon ranged themselves on the side of the kine and his ministers. Addresses and other demonstrations of popular sympathy were received from all parts of the country, and the king was thus encouraged to maintain a firm attitude in front of his opponents 2 The tactics of the two parties in Parliament, and the conduct of their leaders, were also calculated to convert public opinion to the king's side much exasperated to act with caution, the Opposition runed their cause by factious extravagance and pre-They were resolved to take the king's cabinet by storm, and without pause or nailey struck incessantly at the door. Then very diead of a dissolution, which they so loudly condemned, showed little confidence in popular support Instead of making common cause with the people, they lowered their contention to a party struggle Constitutionally the king

&lt;sup>1</sup> Tomline's Life of Pitt, 1 271, drawn up with civility, it will be 341, 390 a clear support of my own probts.

<sup>341,</sup> S96

Writing to Mi Pitt, 22nd Feb, which the addresses from all pats in reference to his answor to the of the kungdom show me the peoaddiess of the 20th, the king said ple feel essential to then liberties."
"I trust that while the answer is —Tomline's Life of Pitt, 1 457.

had a right to dismiss his ministers, and to appeal to the people to support his new administration. The Opposition endeavoured to restrain him in the execuse of this right, and to coerce him by a majority of the existing House of Commons. They had overstepped the constitutional limits of their power, and the assaults diected against precogative, recoiled upon themselves.

On the other side, Mr Pitt as minister rehed upon the prerogative of the king to appoint him,-the duty of Parhament to consider his measures,-and his own right to advise the king to dissolve Parliament, if those measures were obstructed The tact, judgment, conrage, and commanding talents of Mi. Pitt inspired his party with confidence, and secured popularity for his cause; while, by maintaining a defensive attitude, he offered no diversion to the factious tactics of his opponents. His accession to office had been immediately marked by the defection of several members from the Opposition,a circumstance always calculated upon by a minister in those times, and was soon followed by the forbearance of others, who were not prepared to participate in the violent measures of their leaders. The influence of the court and Government was strenuously exerted in making converts, and the growing popularity of their cause discouraged the less zealous of their opponents

Mi. Pitt had waited patiently while the majorities against him in Pailament were falling away, and jubble opinion was declaring itself, more and more, in his favour. The results of the dissolution now revealed the judgment with which he had conducted his cause, and chosen his time for appealing to the people. Every preparation had been made for using the influence of the Crown at the elections,-the king himself took the deepest personal interest in the success of the ministerial candidates1, and Mr Pitt's popularity was at its height, when Parliament was dissolved His enemies were everywhere put to the rout, at the hustings To support Mr Pitt was the sole pledge of the popular candidates. Unwards of one hundred and sixty of his late opponents lost then scats2, and on the assembling of the new Parliament, he could scarcely reckon his majorities 3 The minister was popular in the country, all-powerful in Parliament, and had the entire confidence of the court If such was the success of the minister, what was the triumph of the king! He had expelled one munistry, and retained another, in defiance of the House of Com-The people had pressed forward loyally to his support, and by then aid he had overborne all opposition to his will He now possessed a strong government, and a minister in whom he confided; and he enjoyed once more power, freedom, and popularity Not only had he overcome and ruined a party which he hated; but he had established the ascendency of the Crown, which henceforth, for nearly fifty years, continued to prevail over every other power in the state

<sup>1 &</sup>quot;The precedent of 1784 ostablishes this rule of conduct Chown do not possess the confi-

Such results, however, were not without danger Its results Already the king was too prone to exercise his power, and the encouragement he had received, was hkely to have of the exalt his views of prerogative But he had now a minister dence of the House of Commons, the existing ministry "- Lord John they may adviso an appeal to the people, with whom rests the ulti-mate decision. This course has been followed m 1807, m 1831, m 1834, and in 1841 In 1807 and 1831, the Crown was enabled, as in defeated, however, on the West-1784, to obtain the confidence of the minster Scrutny, Pallamentary New House of Commons In 1884 Reform, and the Scheme of Fortiand 1841, the decision was adverse to fleations on the Coast

Russell's Memorials of Fox, n 246 <sup>1</sup> Rose Couesp , 1 61, 62 <sup>2</sup> Tomline's Life of Pitt, 1 469

<sup>3</sup> His India Bill was carried by a majority of 271 to 60 He was

who-with higher abilities and larger views of state policy - had a will even staonger than his own. Throughout his reign, it had been the tendency of the king's personal administration to favour men whose chief ment was their subservience to his own views, instead of leaving the country to be governed, — as a fice state should be governed, - by its ablest and most popular statesmen 1 He had only had one other minister of the same lofty pretensions, - Lord Chatham; and now, while trusting that statesman's son,sharing his councils, and approving his policy,-he yielded to his superior intellect. Yet were the Royal preddections not without influence on the minister Reared m the Whig school, Mr. Pitt soon deseated the principles, as he had been severed from the connexions, of that party He had been raised to power by royal favour,-maintained in it by prerogative,-and he was now in the ascendant, by having made common cause with the Crown Hence he naturally leant towards preiogative, and Tory principles of government His contests with his great autagonist, Mr Fox, and the Whig party, still further alienated him from the principles of his youth. Until the French Revolution, however, his policy was wise and liberal but from that time his rule became arbitrary, and opposed to public liberty And such were his talents, and such the temper of the times, that he was able to make even arbitrary principles popular. During his long administration the people were converted to Tory principles, and encouraged the king and the minister to repress liberty of thought, and to wage war against opinion. If the king was no longer his own mimster,—as m the time of Lord North,—he had the satisfaction of seeing his own principles carried out by hands far abler than his own In prosecutions of the press1, and the repression of demogratic movements at home? the minister was, perhaps, as zealous as the king · in carrying on war to crush democracy abroad, the king was more zealous than his minister They laboured strenuously together in support of monarchy all over the world, and respected too little the constitutional liberties of their own people

&lt;sup>1</sup> See Lord J Russell's Introd Correspondence, pp 1—1x11. to vol m, of the Duke of Bedford's

Nor did the king i elax his accustomed activity in pub- The king's lic affairs. From the close of the American War until the breaking out of hostilities with France, his pleasure was taken by the Secretary-at-War upon every commission granted in the army, and throughout Mr Pitt's administration,-and, indeed, as long as His Majesty was capable of attending to business, -every act and appointment was submitted to him, for his judgment and approval 8

And if, during the administration of Mr Pitt, the The influking's independent exercise of influence was some-the common augwhat less active, the power of the Crown itself, - mented. as wielded jointly by himself and his minister, was greater than at any former period. The king and his minister were now absolute. A war is generally favourable to authority, by bringing together the people and the Government, in a common cause and combined exertions The French War, notwithstanding its heavy burthens and numerous failures, was popular on account of the principles it was supposed to represent; and the vast expenditure, if it distressed the people, multiphed the pationage of the Crown,-afforded a rich harvest for contractors,-and made the fortunes of farmers

the Subject

<sup>1</sup> See Chapter VIII . Press and 5 Mr Wynn, 14th April, 1812, Hans, Deb, xxu 334 Liberty of Opinion <sup>2</sup> Sec Chapter IX , Liberty of

and manufacturers, by raising the price of every description of produce. The "moneyed classes" ralhed round the war minister,—bought seats in Parliament with their sudden gains,—tanged themselves in a strong phalaix behind their leader,—cheered his speeches, and voted for him on every division. Their zeal was rewarded with peerages, baronetcies, patronage, and all the good things which an inordinate expenditure enabled him to dispense. For years, opposition in Pathament to a minister thus supported, was an idle form, and if beyond its walls, the voice of complaint was iaused, the aim of the law was strong and swift to silence it. To oppose the proposition of the leave the become

The king still prepared to use his infinence against his ministers the minister, had become high treason to the state Great as was the king's confidence in a minister so powerful as Mr Pitt, yet whenever their views of policy differed, the king's resolution was as inflexible as ever Nor were his ministers secure from the exercise of his personal influence against them, when he was pleased to use it The first measure on which Mr Pitt was likely to encounter objections from the king, was that for Parhamentary Reform Having pledged himself to the principles of such a measure, while in opposition, he was determined not to be unfaithful to them now But before he ventured to bring forward his plan. he prudently submitted it to the king, and deprecated the opposition of the court the 20th March, 1785, the king said, Mr Pitt's "letter expressed that there is but one issue of the business he could look upon as fatal, that is, the possibility of the measure being rejected by the weight of those who are supposed to be connected with the Government Mr Pitt must recollect that though

<sup>1</sup> See Chapter VIII , Press and Laberty of Opinion.

I have ever thought it unfortunate that he had early engaged himself in this measure, he ought to lay his thoughts before the House, that out of personal regard to him I would avoid giving any ominion to any one on the opening of the door to Parhamentary Reform, except to hun, therefore I am certain Mr Pitt cannot suspect my having influenced any one on the occasion If others choose, for base ends, to impute such a conduct to me, I must bear it as former false suggestions."1 He proceeded to say that every man ought to vote according to his own opinion, and warned Mr. Pitt that "there are questions men will not, by friendship, be biassed to adopt " This incident is significant Mr Pitt apprehended the exertion of the influence of the Crown to defeat his measure The king was aware of the suspicions attaching to himself, but while promising not to interfere, he could not refigur from intimating that the measure would be defeated, -as indeed it was. - without his interference

The extent to which the preponderating influence Preponof the Crown was recognised during this period, derating influence of is exemplified by the political relations of parties the Clown to his Majesty and to the Prince of Wales, on the occasion of the king's illness in 17882 At that time ministers enjoyed the entire confidence of the king, and commanded an irresistible majority in Parliament, yet was it well understood by both parties, that the first act of the Regent would be to dismiss his father's ministers, and take into his councils the leaders of the Opposition 8 Thus even the party which protested against the influence of the Crown was quite prepared to use it, and by its aid to brave a hostile ma-

3 Tombne's Lafe of Pitt, 11 480

<sup>1</sup> Tomime's Lafe of Pitt, n 40 <sup>2</sup> See Chapter III

jointy in Paihament, as Mr Pitt had successfully done a few years before

Mr Pitt's

At length Mr Pitt's fall itself, like his rise, was due to the king's personal will, and was brought about in the same way as many previous political events, by in esponsible councils There is reason to believe that Mr Pitt's unbending temper,-increased in stubbornness by his longcontinued supremacy in Parliament, and in the cabinet,--had become distasteful to the king 1 His Majesty loved power at least as much as his minister, and was tenacious of his authority, even over those in whom he had confidence Mr Pitt's power had nearly overshadowed his own, and there were not wanting opinions amongst friends of the king, and nivals of the statesman, that the latter had "an overweening ambition, great and opiniative pre-. sumption, and perhaps not quite constitutional ideas with regard to the respect and attention due to the Clown"2 While this feeling existed in regard to Mr. Pitt.

Catholic Question, 1801

his Majesty was greatly agitated by events which at once anoused his sensitive jealousy of councils to which he had not been admitted, and his conscientious scruples. Mr Pitt and his colleagues thought it necessary to mavgurate the Union of Ireland, by concessions to the Roman Catholics , and had been, for some time, dehiberating upon a measure to effect that object. Upon this question, the king had long entertained a very decided opinion. So far back as 1795, he had consulted Lord Kenyon as to the obligations of his coronation oath, and though his lordship's opinions were not

The king's determined opposition to it

<sup>1 27</sup>th Feb , 1801 "I was told the evening, by Pellam, that his — Lod Malmesha y's Conspondent to a long time smee deer, y 24 the particularly with Lord Groupulle's deer y 24.

particularly with Lord Grenville's

'authoritative manners' towards

'mu, and that an alteration in his

Religious Liberty

quite decisive upon this point 1, his Majesty was persuaded that he was morally restrained, by that oath, from assenting to any further measures for the relief of the Roman Catholics Long before the ministers had so far matured their proposal as to be prepared to submit it for his Majesty's approval, he had been made acquainted with their intentions. In September, 1800, Lord Loughborough had shown him a letter from Mi Pitt upon the subject; and the Archbishop of Canterbury, at the suggestion of Lord Auckland, had also informed the king that a scheme was in contemplation, which was represented as dangerous to the Church 2 In December, the Lord Chancellor communicated to his Majesty an elaborate paper against the Roman Catholic claims 8; and Dr. Stuart, Archbishop of Armagh,-a son of the king's old favourite, Lord Bute,-increased his Majesty's repugnance to the measure which the ministers were preparing 4 The king immediately took counsel with some of the opponents of the Catholic claims, and without waiting for any communication from Mr Pitt, lost no time in declaring his own opinion upon the measure At his levée on the 28th January, 1801, he told Mr Windham, the Secretary-at-Wai, "that he should consider any person who voted for it, as personally indisposed towards him "5 On the same occasion he said to Mr Dundas, "I shall reckon any man my personal

<sup>1</sup> They were published by Di w 2 His Lordship in telating this Philipotts (afterwards Bishop of circumstance, states that Pitt had Excted) in 1827 communicated the measure on the

<sup>2</sup> Lord Sidmouth's Lafe, 1 315, Loid Malmesbury's Coilesp , iv 16, 17, 22 Lord Campbell's Lives of the previous day, but it appears from Lord Sidmouth's Life, that this communication was not received by the king until Sunday the 1st Feb, though Lord Grenville and Mr Dundas had already spoken to his Majesty upon the subject -Life, 1 enemy, who proposes any such measure The most Jacobinical thing I ever heard of 1<sup>n</sup> 1. On the 29th, he wrote to Mr Addington, the Speaker, desiring him to "open Mr Pitt's eyes on the danger arising from the agitating this improper question "2 Mr Addington undertook this commission, and thought he had dissuaded Mr Pitt from proceeding with a measure, to which the king entertained insuperable objections 2 But fat first inclined to yield, Mr. Pitt, after consulting the cabinet and other political friends, determined to take his stand, as a responsible minister, upon the advice he was about to tender to the king

Cha cellors, vi 306, 322, et seq . Rose's Cornesp , 1 209

<sup>4</sup> Castlereagh's Corresp , 1v 83 Majesty u 5 Lord Malmesbury's Corresp , 285, 287.

Mr Canning is said to have advised Mr Pitt not to give way on this occasion. It was his opinion, "that for several years so many concessions had been made, and so many important measures overruled, from the ling's opposition to them, that Government had been weakened exceedingly, and if on this particular occasion a stand was not made, Pitt would retain only a nominal power, while the real one would pass into the hands of those who influenced the king's mind and opinion, out of sight."

Mr Pitt refuses to abandon it, and resigns out of sight "*

Whether sharing this opinion or not, Mr Pitti himself was too deeply impressed with the necessity of the measure, and perhaps too much committed to the Catholics, to withdraw it It appears, however, that he might have been induced to give way, if he could have obtained an assurance from his Majesty, that ministers should not be opposed by the king's friends in Parlament's On the Ist February, he

Wilberforce's Diary, Lafe, in Lafe of Lord Sidmouth, 1 280, 7, Court and Cabinets of Geo III, 287 us 136, Lufe of Lord Sidmouth, 1 280, Rose's Concesp, 1 303 2 The king to Mi Addington, 5 Rose's Concesp, 1 304, 309 made the formal communication to the king, which his Majesty had, for several days, been expecting. The king had been aware of Mr Pitt's determination before he received this letter, and had wished Mr Addington, even then, to form a new administration. By Mi Addington's advice, a kind but most unbending answer was returned to Mr Pitt, in which his Majesty declared that a "principle of duty must prevent him from discussing any proposition tending to destroy the groundwork of our happy constitution"1 The intensity of the king's feeling on the subject was displayed by what he said, about this time, to the Duke of Portland "Were he to agree to it, he should betray his trust, and forfeit his crown, that it might bring the fiamers of it to the gibbet." His trusty counsellor replied "he was sure the king had rather suffer martyrdom, than submit to this measure"2 In vain did Mr Addington endeavour to accommodate these . differences Mr Pitt, being as inflexible as the king, resigned, and Mr Addington was entrusted with thetask of forming an anti-Catholic administration, while an active canvass was undertaken by the courtiers against the Catholic cause, as a matter personal to the kine himself 8

Mr Pitt has been justly blamed for having so long Mr Pitt's concealed his intentions from the king. His Majesty mismanhimself complained to Lord Grenville, that the questile Catholic question tion had been under consideration since the month tion

<sup>1</sup> The king to Mi Pitt, 1st Feb., 288, et seq., 303, 309 1801, Lord Sidmouth's Life, 1 291 Lord Malmesbury's Corresp., All the convergendance between the relation of the convergendance between the relation of the published of t

VOL I

of August, though never communicated to him tall Sunday, the 1st February, and stated his own behef, that if the unfortunate cause of disumon had been openly mentioned to him "in the beginning, he should have been able to avert it entirely "1 Whether this delay arose, as Lord Malmesbury has suggested. "either from indolence," or from want of a "sufficient and due attention to the king's pleasure,"2 it was assuredly a serious error of judgment. It cannot, indeed, be maintained that it was Mr Pitt's duty to take his Majesty's pleasure, before any bill had been agreed upon by the cabinet, but his reticence, upon the general question, aroused the suspicions of the king, and gave those who differed from the minister an opportunity of concerting an opposition at court 8

His sub scauent pledge not to revive

Resolute as was Mr Pitt on this occasion, yet being deeply affected, a few weeks afterwards, by hearing that the king had imputed his illness to the recent conduct of his minister, he conveyed an assurance to his Majesty, that he would not revive the Catholic question 4

The Ling's confidence m Mr Addington

Mr Addington enjoyed the confidence, and even the affection of the king, whose correspondence at this period resembles, -both in its minute attention to every department of business, foreign or domestic 5, and in its terms of attachment—his letters to his former fayounte, Lord North 6

<sup>1</sup> King to Loid Sidmouth, Feb. 7th , Lord Sidmouth's Life, 1 208 2 Lord Malmesbury's Corresp. 1V 2 * Ibid . Rose's Corresp , 1. 308 1 Lord Malmesbury's Corresp , 17 34 , Grifford's Lafe of Pitt, 71 599;

303 On the 18th Feb , 1801, the king writes "I mean to have his affection as well ashis zeal "-Ibid. 305 On the 5th March, he writes

Rose's Correspondence, 1 394 Lord Sidmouth's Lafe, 1 365, 887, 395, 410, 411

&quot;The king cannot find words sufficiently expressive of his Majesty's cordial approbation of the whole arlangements which his own Chancellor of the Erchequer has wisely, and his Majesty chooses to add,

Lord Sidmouth's Lafe, 1 301, most correctly recommended "

The king was rejoiced to find himself free from the restraints which the character and position of Mr Pitt had imposed upon him, and delighted to honour the minister of his own choice, who shared his feelings and opinions,-who consulted him on all occasions,whose amable character and respectful devotion touched his heart, - and whose intellect was not so commanding as to overpower and subdue his own

But this administration, -- formed under circumstances Mr Pitt unfavourable to its stability, and beset, from its very nown, commencement, with jealousies and intrigues1, - after 1804 concluding a peace with France, prepared the way, in less than three years, for Mr Pitt's restoration to power It was not without reluctance that the king found himself obliged to part with his favourite minister, and to submit himself again to the loftier temper of Mr Pitt . but he was convinced of the impracticability of upholding any longer the administration of Mr Addington 2

Mr Pitt uiged upon the king the necessity of form- The king's ing a strong government, by a union with Loid Gren- admit ville and M1. Fox, but such was his Majesty's repug- Mr Fox nance to the latter, that he absolutely refused to admit him into the cabinet 8 So inveterate was his aversion to this statesman, -aggravated, at this period, by mental Ibid, 353 Again, on the 19th May, writes "The messenger who reand on other occasions, he terms Mi, Addington "his Chancellor of the Exchequer"—Bid, 304 Sometimes he addresses him as "My dear Chancellor of the Exchequer "-Ibid, 395 On the 14th June, he writes "The king is highly gratified at the repeated marks of the sensibility of Mi Addington's heart, which must greatly add to the comfort of having placed him with so much propriety at the head of the Treasury He trusts then mutual aflection can only cease with then lives"

— Ibid, 408 On the 8th July, he turned from Cuffinals, agreeable to order, called at Winchester that Mi Addington might hear of his son "—Ibid, 428 Lord Sidmouth's Life, 1 335—

340, n 107, 117, &c &c, Lotd Malmesbury's Corresp, nv. 96, 40, 42, 49, 91, 97, 102, 167, 297, &c &c, Rose's Concesp, 1 202, 817, 329, 449, n 152 2 Twins's Lafe of Eddon, 1 437—

450 See also infia, p 170

Twiss's Lafe of Eldon, 1 446— 450, Rose's Corresp, n 118, 122

disorder, -that he afterwards declared "that he had taken a positive determination not to admit Mr Fox into his councils, even at the hazard of a civil war "1 Mr Fox being proscribed, the Opposition would listen to no propositions for an arrangement2, and Mr Pitt was obliged to place himself at the head of an administration, weak

Lord Sid. mouth's relations to the king and the munisters

in talents as well as in parhamentary support Meanwhile, Mr. Addington took up a position in the House of Commons, as leader of the "king's friends,"—a party numbering sixty or seventy members 8 He was still supposed to be in communication with the king4, and his supporters were sometimes ranged against the Government 5 He professed personal adherence to the king to be the rule of his political conduct Wilting soon after his retirement from office, he says "I shall keep aloof from all parties, adhere to the king, and take a course that I can conscientiously justify to His attitude was so formidable, that Mr Pitt was soon obliged to admit him and his followers to a share of the government 7 The king earnestly desued his union with Mi Pitts, which the renewal of friendly intercourse between them easily brought about He accordingly joined the administration, as Viscount Sidmouth, and President of the Council, and induced lus friends, who had been lately voting against the Government, to lend it their parliamentary support But being dissatisfied with the share of influence coneeded to himself and his allies in the cabinet, he shortly afterwards threatened to resign 9 And when, on

Rose's Corresp , n 156, 182 Ibid , 124—126 , Court and Cabmets of theo III, m 352, Mem of

Fox, 1v 53 8 Rose's Con1, 119

* Ibid., 141. * Ibid., 158

<sup>325, 348</sup> a Lord Sidmouth's Life, in

Lord Sidmouth's Life, n 315 7 Court and Cabinets of Geo III , III, 388, Lord Sidmouth's Lafe, 11,

Rose's Cornesp , 11 358, 360— 364

the impeachment of Lord Melville, Mr Hiley Addington, and Mr Bond, who had been promised places, spoke and voted against the Government differences arose between himself and Mr Pitt, which led to his resignation 1

Meanwhile, the only matter on which Mi Pitt and Evasion of the king were at variance, was not suffered again to the Cathodisturb their friendly relations Mr Pitt had renewed by Mr Pitt the assurance which he had given the king in 1801. that he would not revive the question of Catholic emancipation, during his Majesty's life 2 Not satisfied with this assurance, the king required "an explicit declaration that he would never, at any time, agitate or support the question of Catholic emancipation, or the repeal of the Test Act "8 . This latter pledge Mr Pitt, it would seem, contrived to evade 4, but he was careful to avoid the forbidden ground, and was even obliged to oppose others who ventured to trespass upon 1t 5 Though Mr Pitt recovered the king's confidence, his Majesty continued to form his own independent opinions, and to exercise a large influence in the government and patronage of the State 6

The death of M1 Pitt, in the midst of defeats, and dis- Gienville asters to the European cause in which he was engaged, 1806 once more forced upon the king an administration, formed from a party in whom he had no confidence It was necessary to accept the ministry of "all the talents," that his friend and biographer, Di Tomline, Bishop of Lincoln, should be promoted to the See of Canter-

Rose's Conesp , n 368—375 <sup>2</sup> Ibid , 114, 157—174 <sup>3</sup> Ibid , 117 4 Lord Sidmouth's Life, 11 464

* Hans Pail Deb, v 1013, see ulso Chap XII, on Civil and Reh-6 Rose's Cornesp , u. 122, 124, 141, 158, 160 Mr. Pitt was anxious 91, &c

buy, but the king insisted upon appointing Di Manneis Sutton, Bishop of Norwich, notwithstand-ing all the solucitations of his minister —Rose's Corresp. 11 82

under Lord Grenville and Mr Fox¹, and personal intercouse soon overcame the king's antipathy to the latter ² Lord Sidmouth having a strong body of parliamentary friends, who, to use the words of his biographer, "constituted a species of aimed neutrality, fair too powerful to be safely overlooked," and being 'undeistood to enjoy the favour and confidence of the king, and to be faithfully devoted to his Majesty's interests, " as an induced to join a party with whom he had neither connexion, nor political sympathies. The king's friends were not to be neglected, and were amply provided for ⁴ Lord Sidmouth himself, "not wishing to excite jealousy by very frequent intercourse with the king," declined the Presidency of the Council,

Admission of Lord Ellenborough to the cabinet and accepted the less promnent office of Privy Seal s

As there was a difficulty in admitting any of Lord
Sudmouth's political frends to the cabuet, Lord Ellenborough, the Lord Chief Justice of the Court of King's Bench, was associated with him, in order to give weight to his counsels s
This arrangement was open to grave constitutional objections. It had been the policy of our laws to render the judges independent of the Crown?, and now the first criminal judge became one of its confidential advisers Though the appointment was successfully defended in Parlament, where the precedent of Lord Mansfield was much lebed on, it was generally condemned by with Lord Ellenborough by his side, put him in mind of a faithful old steward with his mastiff, watching now servants, lest they should have some ovil designs against the old

Rose's Corresp, n 296
 Twiss's Lafe of Eldon, 1 510
 Loud Sudmouth's Lafe, n 412
 Ibid, 424
 Ibid, 416, Mr Abbot's Duary,

<sup>424</sup> On the death of Mr Fox he family mansion"—Lord Sidmouth's became President of the Council Lofe, in 417

8 Wilberfores's Lafe, in 256

Lord Rous and "Lord Sidmouth. c 23

public opinion, and no similar appointment has since bcen made 1

Before the new ministry was completed, the king bifference with the was alarmed at a supposed invasion of his prerogative king on On the 1st February, Lord Grenville proposed to his nistration Majesty some changes in the administration of the army army, by which the question was raised whether the army should be under the immediate control of the Crown, through the Commander-in-Chief, or be subject to the supervision of ministers. The king at once said that the management of the army rested with the Crown alone, and that he could not permit his ministers to interfere with it, beyond the levying of the troops, their pay and clothing Lord Gienville was startled at such a doctrine, which he conceived to be entirely unconstitutional, and to which he would have refused to submit. For some time it was believed that the pending ministerial arrangements would be broken off, but on the following day Lord Grenville presented a minute to his Majesty, stating that no changes in the management of the army should be effected without his Majesty's approbation 2 To the doctrine thus amended, there could be no reasonable objection, and the king assented to it.

The Grenville ministry fell, like that of Mr Pitt in 1801, Differences with the by proposing a measure affecting the king's religious king on the scruples As all the cucumstances regarding this mea- Navy Seisure will be described elsewhere 8, it is sufficient here to vice Bill say that on proposing the Army and Navy Service Bill.by which some of the disqualifications of officers in the

&lt;sup>1</sup> Hans Deb., vi 308, Lord Campbell's Lives of Chief Justices, Sidmouth's Life, ii 410, 1401, Lives of the Chancellois, <sup>3</sup> Chapter XII, on Civil and Rein 451, Laves of the Chancellois, vi 584, Lord Sidmouth's Lafe, n 417, Chapter on Administration of Justice.

amy and navy, being Roman Cathohes and Dissenters, wereremoved,—the ministers either neglected to explain its provisions with sufficient distinctness to the king, or failed to make themselves understood. After the bill had been introduced, as they believed, with his "nelucant assent." his Majestry's distasts for it became inflamed into violent disapprobation. To propose such a measure at all, was a strange indiscretion. Knowing the king's repugnance to every concession to the Catholics, they might have profited by the experience of Mr. Pitt. The Chancellor foresaw the danger they were incurring, and with Lord Ellenborough and Lord Sidmouth, protested against the measure. The friends of the Government

Activity of the king's friends called at an act of suicide 1 The king's friends, and the opponents of the ministry. did not neelect this favourable opportunity of turning his Majesty's well-known religious scruples to account, but soon directed his personal influence against his ministers On the 4th March, Lord Sidmouth "apprised his Majesty of the nature and details of the measure, "2 said he should himself oppose it, and soon afterwards tendered his resignation to Lord Grenville On the 12th, the Duke of Portland wrote to the king, expressing his belief that the measure had not received his Majesty's consent, and that it could be defeated in the House of Lords "But for this purpose," said his grace, "I must fairly state to your Majesty, that your wishes must be distinctly known, and that your present ministers should not have any pretext for equivocating upon the subject, or any ground whatever to pretend ignorance of your Majesty's sentiments and determination, not only to withhold your sanction from the present measure, but to use all your influence in resisting it " Writing on the same day, his grace said . " His Majesty has signified his orders to my nephews, Lords George and James Thynne, to vote against it"2 On the following day a person came to Lord Malmesbury from the Queen's house, authorised to say, "that his Maiesty's wishes, sentiments, and intentions, respecting every measure which may lead to alter the legal restrictions the Catholics are liable to, are invariably the same as they always have been, and always will be so "8 The king himself also intimated to Lord Grenville, that "he should certainly think it right to make it known that his sentiments were against the measure,"4

&lt;sup>1</sup> Lord Malmesbury's Corresp , <sup>2</sup> Lord Sidmouth's Life, ii 450 iv 381—384 462

Hence it appears that courties and intiguing statesmen were still as ready as they had been twenty-five years before, to influence the king against his ministers, and to use his name for the purpose of defeating measures in Parliament, while the king himself was not more scrupulous in committing himself to irregular interference with the freedom of parliamentary deliberations On this occasion, however, opposition to Withdrawthe munistry in Parliament by the king's friends, obnoxious was averted by the withdrawal of the measure announcing its abandonment to the king, the mimsters committed a second indiscretion. They reserved Pledge proto themselves, by a minute of the cabinet, the right the king, of openly avowing their sentiments, should the Ca- and removal of the tholic Petition be presented, and of submitting to ministers his Majesty, from time to time, such measures as they might deem it advisable to seponose 5 The king not only desired them to withdraw this part of the minute, but demanded from them a written declaration that they would never, under any circumstances, propose to him further concessions to the Catholics, or even offer him advice upon the subject 1 To such a pledge it was impossible for constitutional ministers to submit were responsible for all public measures, and for the good government of the country, and yet, having abandoned a measure which they had already proposed, they were now called upon to fetter their future discretion. and to bind themselves irrevocably to a policy which they thought dangerous to the peace of Ireland The king could scarcely have expected such submission ministers refused the pledge, and the king proceeded to form a new administration under Mr. Perceval. He had regarded this contest with his ministers as "a struggle for his throne," saying, "he must be the Protestant king of a Protestant country, or no king " 2

Letter to Mr T Grenville, 14th Lord Malmosbury's Corresp. v March, 1807 (Court and Cabinets of Geo III, 1v 185) 5 Hans Deb, 1x. 231—247, Lafe 2 Ibid, 371 * Ibid , 373

Proceedings in the Commons on the change of ministry, 1807 In the Commons, the dismissal of the Government on these grounds, and the constitutional dangers involved in such an exercise of the prerogative, did not pass without animadversion. On the 9th April, Mr Braud moved a resolution, "That it is contrary to the first duties of the confidential servants of the Crown to restrain themselves by any pledge, expressed or implied, from offering to the lang any advice which the course of circumstances may render necessary for the welfare and security of the empire." In the debate it was argued, that as the king was not responsible by law, if the munisters should also claim to be absolved from responsibility, by reason of pledges given to the lang, of Lord Sidmouth, n 463, Lord mouth's Life, n 464, Rose's Cor-Malmosbury's Corresp, nv 380, respondence, n 528—331 Rose's Corresp, n 821—827 1 Hone Date nr 464

there would be no security for the people against the evils of bad government. Had the ministers agreed to such a pledge, they would have violated their oaths as privycouncillors, and the king would have become absolute To what dangers would the country be exposed if ministers might bind themselves to give such advice only as should be agreeable to the sovereign 91 Nor did the conduct of secret advisers escape notice, who had counteracted the measures of the public and responsible advisers of the Crown 2 On the other side at was contended that the stipulation proposed by the ministers, of being at liberty to support in debate a measure which they had withdrawn, -and of which the king disapproved, -was unconstitutional, as tending to place the kine in direct opposition to the Parhament, -an evil which was ordinarrly avoided by the ministers refraining from supporting any measure to which the king might hereafter have to give his veto The late ministers were even charged with having, in the explanation of the causes of their retirement, arraigned their sovereign at the bar of Parliament.8 Mr Perceval denied that the king had conferred with any secret advisers until after the ministers were dismissed, and said that, in requiring the pledge, he had acted without any advice whatever The ministers, he declared, had brought upon themselves the pledge proposed by the king, which would never have been suggested, had they not desired to impose conditions upon his Majesty

Sir Samuel Romilly went so far as to maintain that if ministers had subscribed such a pledge, they would have been guilty of a high crime and misdemeanor 4 With

<sup>1</sup> See also Chapter XII on Civil ix 299, Mi Ponceval, ib, 310, id Religious Laberty Mr. Bathurst, ib, 331, Mr. Canand Religious Liberty

<sup>2</sup> Mr. Plunkett, Hans Deb ,rx 312

<sup>3</sup> General Chaufurd, Hans, Deb,

<sup>4</sup> Hans Deb ,rx 327,

negard to Mr Perceval's statement, that the king had acted without advice, Sir Samuel said, that there could be no exercise of prerogative in which the king was without some adviser. He might seek the counsels of any man, however objectionable, but that man would be responsible for the advice given, and for the acts of the Crown There was no constitutional doctrine more important than this, for the protection of the Crown "History had unfolded the evils of a contrary principle having prevailed" It was also well observed by Mr Whitbread, that the avowal of ministers that the king had acted without advice, amounted to a declaration on their part, that they disowned the responsibility of the act complained of, and left his Majesty to bear the blame of it himself, without that protection which the constitution had provided but that from this responsibility they could not escape, for by accepting office, they had assumed the responsibility which they had shown so much anxiety to avoid

But Lord Howick demed that the king had acted without advice, and asserted that there had been secret advisers, who had taken peans to poison the royal mind. On the Saturday before the pledge had been required, Lord Eldon had an audience, and both Lord Eldon and Lord Hawkesbury were consulted by the king, before measures were taken for forming a new administration. They were, therefore, the king's responsible advisers. In answer to these allegations, Mr Canning stated that Lord Eldon's visat to Windsor had taken place on Saturday se'might, preceding the change of ministry, that it had reference to a matter of extreme delucacy, unconnected with these events, and that before he went, Lord Eldon had explained to Lord Grenville the object of his visit, and promised to mention no other subject to his Majesty 1 He added, that the Duke of Portland, Mr. Perceval, and himself, had endeavoured to prevent the separation between the late ministers and the king, by amicable explanations Mr Canning concluded by saving, that the ministers were "determined to stand by their sovereign, even though circumstances should occur in which they may find it their duty to appeal to the country "2 In answer to this threat, Lord Henry Petty said that a great constitutional wrong had been done, and that no such intimidation would induce the House to refrain from expressing their sense of it This motion had been met by one for reading the other orders of the day, and the latter was carried by a majority of thirty-two 8 The Opposition were so little prepared for this result, that, during the division, Lord Howick addressed the members in the lobby, and said that being nearly certain of a majority4, they must follow up their success with "an address to the throne, to meet the threat which had been thrown out that evening,-a threat unexampled in the annals of Parhament"5 The House adjourned at half-past six in the moining denied having had any communication with the king on the Catholic Question, or the ministers -Tiens's

Life, 11 36-38

<sup>2</sup> Hans Deb, 1x 346 According to Sir S Romilly, Mr Canning said, "he had made up his mind, when the Catholic Bill was flist men-tioned, to vote for it if the king was for it, and against it if the king was against it Every art was used to interest persons for the king , his age was repeatedly men- -Romilly's Life, ii 194

<sup>1</sup> Loid Eldon hunself expressly troned, his prous scruples, his regard for his coronation oath, which some members did not sciuple to say would have been violated if the bill had passed "-Romilly's Lafe, 11

194 5 Aves, 258, Noes, 226

<sup>4</sup> A majority of twenty was ex-pected — Romilly's Lafe, ii 195 Hans Deb, 1x 348 It was intended to follow up this motion, if carned, by resolutions expressing want of confidence in the ministers

Proceedings in the Lords,

On the 13th April, a discussion was raised in the House of Lords upon a motion to the same effect, proposed by the Marquess of Stafford 1 The most remarkable speech was that of Lord Easkine, who had already expressed his opinions on the subject, to the king himself 2 Not being himself, on account of religious scruples, favourable to the Catholic claims, he vet ridiculed the argument that the king had been restrained by his coronation oath, from assenting to the late measure He had assented to the Act of 1793, which admitted Catholic majors and colonels to the army, without perjury .-- how then could his oath be violated by the admission of staff-officers? On the question of the pledge he asked, "Is it consistent with the laws and customs of the realm that the king shall make a rule for his own conduct, which his councillors shall not break in upon, to disturb with their advice?" If it were, "the king, instead of submitting to be advised by his councillors, might give the rule himself as to what he will be advised in, until those who are solemnly sworn to give full and impartial counsel, and who are responsible to the public for their conduct as his advisers, might be penned up in a corner of their duties and jurisdiction, and the state might go to run "

Agun, as to the personal responsibility of the king, he laid it down that "the king can perform no act of government himself, and no man ought to be received within the walls of this House, to declare that any act of Government has proceeded from the private will and determination, or conscience of the king. The king, as chief magistrate, can have no conscience which is not in the trust of responsible subjects. When he delivers the seals of office to his office is of state, his conscience, as it regards the state, accompanies them "" "No act of state, or government can, therefore, be the king's he cannot act but by advice, and he who holds office sanctions what is done, from whatever source it may proceed"

&lt;sup>1</sup> It embraced all the words of <sup>2</sup> Ronnilly's Life, 11, 188 Mr. Brand's motion, but prefixed a prescrible.

By Loid Harrowby the motion was represented as placing the House in the situation "of sitting in judgment upon the personal conduct of their sovereign." But perhaps the best position for the Crown was that assumed by the Earl of Selkirk. The king, he said, could not be accountable to Parlhament for his conduct in changing his advisers, and the proposed pledge was merely a motive for such a change, beyond the reach of parlhament fary investigation.

Another view was that of Lord Sidmouth. Admitting that for every act of the executive government there must be a responsible adviser, he "contended that there were many functions of the sovereign which, though strictly legitimate, not only might, but must be performed without any such responsibility being attached to them, and which must, therefore, be considered as the poisonal acts of the king. Of these the constitution does not take coguisance "2 It was the object of this ingenious argument to absolve from responsibility both the king, who could do no wrong, and his present advisers, who, by accepting office, had become responsible for the measures by which then predecessors had been removed. This unconstitutional position was well exposed by the Earl of Lauderdale

<sup>1</sup> Hans, Deb , rx 355-365.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid , 1x S99.

The example of Lord Danby was felicitously cited both by the Earl of Lauderdale and Lord Holland in support of the constitutional principle that the king can have no separate responsibility. Lord Danby, having been impeached for offences committed as a minister, had produced a written authority from the king in his defeace, but was yet held responsible for the execution of the king's commands. nay, the House of Commons voted his plea an aggravation of his offences, as exposing the king to public odium.

This doctrine, in truth,—that for every act of the Crown some adviser must be inesponsible,—could not be demed, but the attifice of putting forth the king personally, and representing him as being on his trial at the bir,—this repeated use of the king's name, was a tower of strength to the ministerial party <sup>2</sup>

Lord Stafford's motion had been met by the previous question, but eventually the division was taken upon the adjournment of the House, which was carried by a majority of eighty-one, and thus the motion was superseded. The House did not adjourn until seven o'clock in the morning.

Mr Lyttleton's motion, 15th April, 1807. But even now the question was not set at rest. On the 15th April, Mr. W. H. Lyttleton renewed the discussion, in proposing a resolution expressing regret at the late changes in his Majesty's councils. The debate added httle to the arguments on either side, and was brought to a close, at half-past six in the moining, by the House resolving to pass to the orders of the day <sup>4</sup>

Impoles of the cabinet manute

As a question of policy, it had obviously been a false step, on the part of the ministers, to give expression to their reservations in the minute of the Cabinet They had agreed to abandon the bill which had caused the difference between themselves and his Majesty, and, by vutue of their office, as the king's ministers, were free, on any future occasion, to offer such advice as they might think proper. By their ill-advised minute, they invited the retaliation of this obnoxious pledge. But no constitutional writer would now be found to defend the pledge itself, or to maintain that the ministers who accepted office in consequence of the refusal of that pledge, had not taken upon themselves the same responsibility as if they had advised it

&lt;sup>1</sup> Hansaid's Debates, 1x 405, 414 90 Hansaid's Debates, 1x 422 Romilly's Lafe, 11 197 4 Aves. 244 Nees 109 Hansaid's Debates, 1x 422

Romilly's Life, in 197 Ayes, 244, Noes, 108 Han-Contents, 171, Non-contents, said's Debates, ix 432—475

Meanwhile, though this was the first session of a new The dis-Parliament, a speedy dissolution was determined upon April 1807 Advantage was taken of the prevalent anti-Catholic feeling which it was feared might subside, but the main issue raised by this appeal to the country was the propriety of the recent exercise of prerogative. In the Lords Commissioners' speech, on the 27th April, the king said he was "anxious to recur to the sense of his people, while the events which have recently taken place are yet fresh in their recollection" And he distinctly invited their opinion upon them, by declaring that "he at once demonstrates, in the most unequivocal manner, his own conscientious persuasion of the recutude of those motives upon which he has acted, and affords to his people the best opportunity of testafving their determination to support him in every exercise of the prerogatives of his crown, which is conformable to the sacred obligations under which they are held, and conducive to the welfare of his kingdom, and to the security of the constitution" The recent exercise of prerogative is thus associated with the obligations of his coronation oath, so as to unite, in favour of the new ministers, the loyalty of the people, their personal attachment to the sovereign, and their zeal for the Protestant establishment. Without such appeals to the loyalty and religious feelings of the people, the influence of the Crown was alone sufficient, at that time, to command a majority for ministers, and their success was complete.

Meeting of Parhament Amendments to address, 26th June, 1807. The three years prior to the regency

was complete
On the meeting of the new Parliament, amendments to the address were proposed in both Houses, condemning the dissolution, as founded upon "groundless and mjurious pretences," but were rejected by large majorities <sup>1</sup>

majorites <sup>1</sup>
The king's will had prevailed, and was not again to be called in question. His own power, confided to the Tory ministers who were henceforth admitted to his councils, was supreme. Though there was still a party of the king's friends<sup>2</sup>, his Majesty agreed too well with his ministers, in principles and policy, to require the aid of irresponsible advisers. But his rule, once more absolute,—after the struggles of fifty years,—was drawing to a close. The will, that had been so strong and unbending, succumbed to disease, and a reign in which the king had been so resolute to govern, ended in a royal "phantom," and a regency <sup>8</sup>

&lt;sup>1</sup> In the Lords by a majority of 98, and in the Commons by a majority of 196.—Hansa d's Debates, ix. 557—658,

CHAP II

INFLUENCE OF THE CROWN DURING THE REGENCY, THE REIGNS OF GEORGE IV, WILLIAM IV, AND HER MAJESIY, QULEN VICTORIA

THE Prince Regent differed too much, in character and Character habits, from his royal father, to be inclined to exercise Prince the influence of the Crown, with the same activity George III, eager for power, had also delighted in business, to which he had trained himself from early youth 1 With greater abilities, and superior education, the prince was fond of ease and pleasure. and averse to business. His was not the temperament to seek the labour and anxiéties of public affairs, nor had power devolved upon him, until the ambitious spirit of youth had ceased to prompt him to exertion. He loved the "pomp and circumstance" of royalty, without its cases. But though disinchied to the daily toils which his father had undergone for fifty years, - and disposed, by indolence and indifference, to leave more discretion to his ministers, in the ordinary affans of state, yet whenever his own feelmes or interests were concerned, his father himself had scarcely been more imperative

The very qualities, however, which disinclined the Influence prince to laborious activity, exposed him the more court readily to the influence of his court. His father's will

&lt;sup>1</sup> See debate, 14th April, 1812, on vate Secretary to the Prince Regent. Col. M'Mahon's appointment as Pri—Hansa d's Deb , 1st Ser , x x 1, 382

was strong, and full of energy his own, inconstant and capricious The father had judged for himself, with rude vigour and decision the son, - impulsive, indolent, and without strength of principle or conviction .- was swaved by the advice of those nearest to his person

The early events of the regency displayed at once the preponderating influence of the Crown, over all other powers of the state, and the subjection of the regent to the counsels of the court

His separation from friends

To politics, apart from their relations to himself, the ration from his political prince was indifferent, and his indifference led to the same results, as the king's strong predilections He readily gave up the opinions, as well as the political friends of his youth As to his friends, indeed, he had been separated from them for many years, by the French Revolution 1 the death of Mr Fox had more recently loosened the tie which had bound them together the part taken by them against the Duke of York, had further relaxed it, and the proud bearing of the great Whig leaders, - little congenial to the lighter manners of the court, - had nearly broken it asunder But lately they had exerted themselves strenuously against the restrictions upon the powers of the regent, which the Government, following the precedent of 1788, had proposed, and their general views of policy were supposed to coincide with his own

Mr Perceval's administration

Other cucumstances pointed strongly to their being now called to office The Perceval administration.

<sup>1</sup> Mr Eashne, writing to Mr monarchy in Figure And as it is Lee, 8th Feb 1793, said "We are the cause of kings, our prince is now plunging, for nothing, or in ther diawn into it, and has taken his for mischief, into a calamitous wai, leave of all of us "—Rockingham in combination (not awaved) with Memons, ii 127.

the despots of the North, to restore which had owed its origin to the king's dread of the Roman Catholic claims, was weak and disunited. and while the leading statesmen of all other parties were favourable to the Roman Catholic cause, the sole ment of this ministry lay in their opposition to it. Mr Perceval himself had been personally obnoxious to the prince, as the friend and adviser of his detested princess, Caroline of Brunswick nor had the chancellor, Lord Eldon, been free from the same offence. The regent had also suspected the latter of keeping him at a distance from his father, and told his lordship afterwards "that there was no person in the whole world that he hated so much, as for years he had hated him " 1

The prince had further raised the expectations of the The prince Opposition, by confiding to Lord Grenville and Lord the advice Grey the drawing up of his answer to the joint reGranville Grenville solutions of the two Houses on the conditions of the and Grey regency, and he, as suddenly, repressed these expectations by rejecting their draft for another, -the composition of himself and Mr. Sheridan This proceeding, so contrary to the views of these noblemen as responsible advisers, drew from them a remonstrance, which, however constitutional in doctime, was too lofty in its tone, and partook too much of the character of a lecture, to be altogether acceptable to the prince 2 While the Regency Bill was passing through Parlia- Hopes of ment, the prince had frequent communications with auton the Opposition The plan of a new administration was concerted, and several of the principal places were allotted to the Whig leaders So assured were they of their speedy accession to power, that, realous of the <sup>1</sup> Twiss's Life of Eldon, 11 197, 383, et seq. Duke of Buckingham's Memoirs of the Regency, 1 21, et 2 Moore's Life of Sheudan, 11 seg.

mfluence of Lord Moira and Mr. Sheildan, they were already insisting that the prince should engage to consult none but his future ministers 1. Nor were ministers less persuaded of the impending change 2. The king himself, in his lucid intervals, was informed of it by his chancellor, and was prepared to restore his old servants when he recovered 8 But before the Regency Bill had received the loyal assent, the queen addressed a letter to the prince, suggesting the serious conscquences which a change of ministry might have upon the king's recovery. The prince accordingly acquainted Lord Grenville that the state of his Majesty's health prevented the removal of ministers,

There theappointment.

His prothey should Perecval.

When the restrictions upon the prince's powers, as regent, were about to expire, and the king's recovery had become more improbable, it was still believed that he would, at length, form a new administration consisting of the Opposition leaders He contented himself, however, with proposing, through the Duke of York, that "some of those persons with whom the early habits of his public life were formed," should agree to strengthen Mr. Perceval's administration, - a proposal which they could scarcely have been expected to accept 5 In suggesting this airangement, he truly avowed that he had "no predilections to indulge," having now become Rose Corresp , 11 471—475 * Twiss's Life of Lord Eldon, ii 197, 5 Ibid , 477

but that his confidence was entirely with his lordship, Loid Grev, and his other friends 4

"The whole will end, I doubt not, m the continuance of Perceval, with Castlereagh and Sidmouth to help him And this, I believo, is what Lord Yarmouth means, whose intentions are those which are alone "Interacting Deceases, XXII 36, as interactions are chose which are these Duke of Buckingsham's Memours of any consequence "—Ind. 225 the Regency, 1 222 Lord Gren-Wile, writing to the Marquess of —Ind. 225, Lafe of Str J. Romilly, Buckingsham, Feb 18th, 1812, sand: in 11.

Rose Corresp , n 478, 479 5 Hansard's Debates, xxn 39, n

as indifferent to the principles, as to the persons, of the Whig leaders

Restrained for a time, by the possibility of the king's His esrecovery , from making any changes, he had easily trangement from the become satisfied with existing arrangements, -his leaders contentment being increased by a liberal civil list This result was imputed to secret counsels, - to the persuasion of the queen, the Hertford family, and the court Parliament and the press resounded with denunciations of these covert influences 2 But the events of Paramount this period had a deeper import than the intrigues of the Grown a court, and the disappointments of a party They marked the paramount influence of the Crown in the government of the country. Here were the two great parties in the state looking to royal favour alone, as the source of their power It was never doubted by the ministers, that, if they retained the confidence of the prince regent, they would be able to command the support of Parliament. It was never doubted by the Opposition, that, if invited to accept office, they would be able to maintain their position as firmly as the ministers, whom they were seeking to displace Both parties were assured, that the support of Paihament would follow the confidence of the Crown Whigs had rehed upon the personal friendship of the prince regent but the ministers, having supplanted their rivals by court favour, continued to govern the

&lt;sup>1</sup> Rose Corresp , n 478, 479 <sup>2</sup> Debate on Lord Boringdon's motion, 19th March, 1812 Lord Darnley, Earl Grey, &c -Hansard's Debates, xx11 62,80 Lord Donoughmore, April, 21st, 1812 - Ibid , 525

as it were, hemmed in with minions"-Ibid, 1163. Moore's Life of Sheridan, n. 394, 407, Life of Su S Romilly, n. 366, Wilberforce's Life, nr. 494, Duke of Backingham's Memoirs of the Regency, 1 25, Mi Lyttleton, May 4th, 1812, said et seg., 71, 183, 177, 241, 248, "It was notonious that the legent Twiss's Life of Lord Eldon, ii was surrounded with favourites, and, 193

country, with the acquiescence of an obsequious Parlament There was no appeal, on either side, to political principles or policy, or to public service; but all alike looked upwards to the court The Tory party happened to prevail; and the government of the state was, therefore, conducted on Tory principles If the Whig party had been placed in power, without any change in public opinion, Whig principles would have been in the ascendant

Negotiations on the death of Mr Perceval 1812

The assessmation of Mr Perceval made an unexpected opening for a new ministry, but the court appears to have been resolved that no considerable change should follow Overtures were made to Lord Wellesley and Mr Canning, to strengthen a government to whose policy they were opposed; but, -as had doubtless been expected, - they refused such conditions 1 The old government would have been at once revived, had not the Commons addressed the regent, on the motion of M1. Stuart Wortley, to take measures "to form a strong and efficient administration "2 Lord Wellesley was now commissioned to form a ministry but none of the existing ministers would listen to his overtures, and the Opposition declined to accept such a share of the cabinet as was offered to them , and thus his lordship's mission failed, as the court had, probably, intended.

Lord Moru's At length Lord Morra,—the intimate friend of the prince, and the unconscious tool of the court,—was charged to consult with Lord Grey and Lord Grenvillo, on the formation of an administration He stated that he had a cecived this commission without any restrictions upon the consideration of such points as they judged useful for his service. Nothing could exceed the apparent farmess of this proposal, but, as Lords Grey and Grenville had received information that no changes would The royal be permitted in the royal household 1, they inquired household. whether they should be at liberty to consider appointments to those great offices in the household, which were usually included in political arrangements, on a change of ministry Lord Morra, having obtained the prince's consent to part with the officers of the household, if he should advise it, had assured his royal highness, before he undertook this mission, " that he should not part with one of them." In execution of his promise, he now said that it would be impossible for him to concur in the necessity of changing the household on the formation of a new ministry, and upon this issue the negotiations were broken off As the views of Lord Mona on the one side, and of the Whigs on the other, had been well known before Lord Mona received his commission2, this proposal would seem to have been as illusory as those which had preceded it But there was yet another artifice practised upon the Opposition leaders Though Lord Morra had determined not to agree to any alteration in the household, Loid Hertford, Loid Yarmouth, and the other officers had resolved to resign their offices at court, should the Opposition undertake to form a government But this important information was prevented, by court intigues, from reaching the noble loads who were conducting the negotiations 8

<sup>1</sup> Twiss's Life of Eldon, in 209— 2 Hansaid's Debates, .1st Sei , 213; Court and Cabinets of the xxiii 231, 256 Regency. 1, 305.

They insisted upon the change in order to give "to a new government that character of efficiency and stability, and those marks of the constitutional support of the Crown, which were required to enable it to act usefully for the public service." Loid Mona rested his resistance to a claim,—which, according to custom, could hardly have been opposed in any bond fide consultations,—on the ground that changes in the household would give countenance to the imputations which had been thrown upon the count. It need hardly be said that his conduct produced the very result which he had professed his anytery to act.

<sup>1</sup> Mr. T. Gisrville to Marquess of Boschrigham, 20th Arpl. 1812 mons, 88t and 11th June, 1812, — Duke of Bushringham Internst Hamsul and School, 1812, — Duke of Bushringham Internst Hamsul and School, 1812, — Duke of Ragney, 1825 F. Den same 1868, 807, 984, 900, and Appendix of Same June 1st — Duke, 308, — 182

The regent's antmosity against the Whigs fessed his anxiety to avert The leaders of the Opposition were persuaded of the hollowness of all the proposals which had been made to them, and, knowing the hostility of the court, were as unwilling as their opponents, that these overtures should lead to any result 1 Had they been less lofty and unbending, they might perhaps have overcome the obstacles which they dreaded The negent had not the stubborn will of his royal father. and might have been won over to their side again, if they had once established themselves at court. So thought many of their disappointed followers but the great lords judged otherwise, and proudly shrank from the ungracious task of combating the disfavour of the prince, and the intrigues of his courtiers The prince, indeed, had now become so violent against the Opposition, that we are reminded of George III. in the days of the Coalition "He told Lord Wellesley that he had no objection to one or two of them individually, but as a body he would rather abdicate the regency than ever come into contact with them," And again, after the failure of Lord Moira's mission,-" three times that day, befor e dinner and after dinner, he declared that if Lord Grev had been forced upon him, he should have abdicated "2

These negotiations, meanwhile, had served their pur- Reconstipose The old administration was immediately reconstituted, under the Earl of Liverpool, and when complaints were made in the House of Commons that a pool strong administration had not been formed in comphance with their address, the blame was thrown upon the impracticable leaders of the Opposition The ministers were now safe, and gained an easy triumph over M: Stuart Wortley and Lord Milton, who endeavoured to unsettle the government, by further representations to the regent a

Henceforth the ascendency of Tory politics, which Ascend-George III had established, and which the regent had Tory polibeen expected to overthrow, was maintained more firmly than ever By the influence of the Crown it had been created: and by the same influence it was upheld during the regency, and throughout the reign of George IV All opposition being thus defeated, and the ministers and the court party being agreed, the nance recent had no further need of personal interposition in the government of the country

On his accession to the throne, he was dissatis- Proceedfied with ministers for resisting his demands for a against the larger civil list; but submitted to their judgment, and queen,1820 even, in his speech to Parliament, disclaimed any wish for an increased revenue 4 Soon afterwards

Duke of Buckingham's Memons of the Regency, i. 323 2 Moore's Memoirs, by Loid John Russell, 1 360

&lt;sup>3</sup> June 11th, Hansaid's Debates, 1st Ser, xxiii 397 4 Twiss's Lafe of Eldon, u 363, Com Journ, lxxy 110

his painful relations with the queen led to proceedings of which his ministers could not approve. but in which,-with the honourable exception of Mi Canning 1 .- they were induced to support him The king's personal feelings and honour were concerned, and the embarrassing conduct of the queen herself, led them to accept the responsibility of measures to which the king already stood committed No sooner had he succeeded to the throne than he desired to obtain a divorce, but his ministers, at that time, resisted his wishes, and explained their objections, in some able mmutes of the cabinet 2 He obtained from them, however, an assurance that, if her Majestv should return to England, they would no longer oppose him in his cherished object 8 They were little prepared for so embarrassing an event , but it was soon to be brought about by the offensive measures which the king had taken, and his ministers had sanctioned, against her

The queen had already been irritated by two great msults. Our ambassadors, acting upon their instructions from home, had prevented her recognition as Queen of England at foreign courts, and her name had been omitted, by command of the king, from the hturgy of the Church Even the legality of this latter act was much doubted 4 It was at least so disputable as to be an unwise exercise of the prerogative.5 Such insults as these, naturally provoked the

"The general opinion of lawyers is, I think, unfavourable to the

See Stapleton's Life of Can-ng. 290—295, 315—323
Phillimore, writing to the Marquess of Buckingham, 16th Jan 1821, said ning, 290—295, 315—323 2 10th and 14th February, 1820, Stapleton's Life of Canning, 266, 279, 299

<sup>5</sup> Twiss's Life of Eldon, n 368 4 Debates in Lords and Com-

claim "-Duke of Buokingham's Memours of George IV, 1 109
May O Wynn to the Marquess of mons, 1820, on the papers relating Buckingham. - Ibid , 116. to the conduct of the queen. Dr.

queen to insist upon her proper recognition the same time they aroused popular sympathy in her cause, which encouraged her to proceed to extremities The ministers vainly attempted a compromise but it was too late. The queen was already on her way to England. loudly asserting her rights. They endeavoured to prevent her approach, by submitting a proposal that she should receive an annuity of 50,000l a year, on renouncing her title, and continuing to reside abroad; and threatening proceedings against her in Parliament, if she refused these conditions She refused them, and hastened to England,-when preliminary proceedings were at once commenced Even now there was still hope of a compromise, sought by the queen herself The king was willing to drop all further proceedings against her. and to recognise her title, on condition of her residing abroad , but the queen demanded the restoration of her name in the litingy, and her recognition in at least one foreign court, - which the king refused to concede 1

And now the threat was carried out to the fullest Conduct extent, by the introduction of a bill into the House of ministers extent, by the mtroduction of a bill into the House of Lords, to deprive her Majesty of her title, prerogatives, and lights, and to dissolve her mailings with the king. The ministes were fully sensible of the difficulties, and even of the danger, of yielding to the king's desire to prosecute this formulable measure Lord Eldon, writing in June, 1820, said, "I think no administration, who have any legard for him, will go the length he wishes, as an administration,—and if they will, they cannot take Parliament along with them that body is afraid of disclosures,—not on one side only, which may affect the monarchy itself" But on the failure of all their attempts to effect an accommodation of the 10yal differences, they yielded,—against their better judgment,—to the revengeful spirit of the king.

Debates, 19th June, 1820, when was announced the failure of these negotiations ** Twiss's Life of Eldon, n. 372.

The disgraceful incidents of the "queen's trial" are too well known to need repetition, even if they ought otherwise to find a place in this history. But what were the constitutional aspects of the case? The king had resolved to execute an act of vengeance rather than of justice against the queen,-whose wrongs had aroused for her protection, the strongest popular feelings .sympathy with a woman, and resentment of oppression. All the power of the Crown was arrayed on one side, and the excited passions of the people on the other. The impending conflict was viewed with alarm by statesmen of all parties Many sagacious observers dreaded a cryl war. The ministers foresaw the dangers to which the country was exposed . they disapproved of proceedings which, without their acquiescence, could not have been attempted; - yet they lent themselves to gratify the anger and hatred of the king They were saved from the consummation of their worst fears by the withdrawal of the Bill of Pains and Penalties, at its last stage in the House of Lords . but in proceeding so far, in opposition to their own judgment, they had sinned against their constitutional obligations, as responsible ministers By consenting to act as instruments of the king's pleasure, they brought him into dangerous collision with his people Had they refused to permit, what they could not justify to Parhament or the country, they would have spared the king his humiliation, and the state its perils.

Not to have supported the king in a cause affecting his deepest feelings and his honour, might have exposed them to the reproach of deserting their royal master in his utmost need, and even of siding with his hated consort 1 · but a higher sense of their responsibilities, and greater firmness in asserting them, would have made them mediators between the kmg, on the one side, and the queen, the Parhament, and the people, on the other 2

The Opposition had espoused the queen's cause,— The kuno's some to protect her from oppression,— some to lead a against the popular cause against the ministers,—and others, like Opposition Cobbett, to gratify then bitter hatred of the govern-The king's resentment against those who had opposed him in Parliament, equalled that of his father against Mr Fox Mr Fremantle, writing Dec 29, 1820, to the Marquess of Buckingham, said "His invective against Loid Grev was stronger and more violent than I can possibly repeat," and again. "what I am most anxious to observe to you, was his increased hostility and indignation against the Opposition, and more personally against Lord Grev "8 Yet the same acute observer, who knew the king well, writing again Jan. 24, 1821, said "Lord Grenville fancies a Whige government could not last six months, reasoning from the conduct of George III, but in this I am persuaded he would find himself deceived, for the same decision

Lord Brougham has attributed. then conduct solely to an unworthy desne to retain then places ( Works, 1v SS), but perhaps the suggestion in the text is nearer the truth to, but divorce, we tell you again, is impossible. It can never be,

M1 Canning wrote to Mr Hus-kisson, Oct 2, 1820, that the mimsters ought to have held this language to the king "'Sir,-divorce is impossible! 'What! if she comes, if she biaves, if she insults?' 'Yes, sir, in any case, divorce is impossible Other things may be tried, other expedients may be resorted and see the fluis" (of their conduct),—"a government brought into contempt and detesta-tion, a lengdom thrown into such ferment and convulsion, as no other kingdom or government ever 1e-covered from without a revolution, but I hope we shall "- Stapleton's Life of Canning, 299

Duke of Buckingham's Memous of George IV. i. 99.

and steadiness of mind does not belong to his successor. And should the change once take place, new attachments and habits would prevail, and obliterate all former sugar. 1

Popularity of Geo IV attachments and habits would prevail, and obliterate all former anger "1 Meanwhile, the popularity of the king, which had suffered for a time from these proceedings, was speedily recovered. The monarchy had sustained no permanent mujny '1st influence was not in the least impaired. The personal character of the king was not such as to command the respect or attachment of the people, yet at no previous period had their loyalty been more devoted.—never, perhaps, had the adulation of royalty been so extravagant and servile. There were discontent and turbulence among some classes of the people, but the Crown and its ministers ruled supreme over Parlament, the press, the society and the public opinion of the country. Though the influence of the Crown was acknowledged

Motion of Mr Brougham on the mfluence of the Crown, June 24, 1822

as fully as at any time in the late reign, it had not been brought under parliamentary discussion for many years. when, in 1822, Mr Brougham introduced a motion on the subject He proposed to declare that the influence of the Crown was "unnecessary for maintaining its constitutional prerogatives, destructive of the independence of Parliament, and inconsistent with the well-governing of the realin" By comparing the present expenditure with that of 1780,—the number of places and commissions. the cost of collecting the revenue, and the host of persons looking up to government for patronage, - he pronounced the influence of the Crown to have been greatly increased since Mr Dunning's celebrated resolution He admitted, however, that the number of placemen in the House had been dummished In the time of Loid Carteret there had been two hundred, and at an antecedent period even three hundred, in 1780 there had been between eighty and ninety, and in 1822, eighty-, seven,-many of whom, however, could not be said to be dependent on the Crown He drew an entertaining historical sketch of the manner in which every party, in turn, so long as it held office, had enjoyed the confidence of the House of Commons, but had lost that confidence immediately it was in Opposition, - a coincidence, he attributed to the ascendency of the Crown, which alone enabled any ministry to command a majority. The Maiquess of Londonderry, in a judicious speech, pointed out that the authority of the Crown had been controlled by the increasing freedom of the press, and by other causes; and after a debate of some interest, Mr Brougham's motion was negatived by a large majority 1

Duke of Buckingham's Memous of George IV, 1, 112.

Early in his reign, the king was supposed to be in The king's favour of a measure for the relief of the Roman Catho-the Catholics, and its filends were even speculating upon his lic quesencouragement to carry it through Parliament 2 But in 1824 he had become "violently anti-Catholic," and so paramount was his influence supposed to be over the deliberations of Parhament, that the friends of the cause believed it to be hopeless 8 Until the death of Lord Liverpool, the Catholic claims having small hope of success, it was sufficient to let the king's opinions be known through common report But when Mr Canning, the brilliant champion of the Roman Catholics, had become first minister, his Majesty thought it necessary to declare his sentiments, in a more authentic shape And accordingly he sent for the Archbishop of Canterbury, and the Bishop of London, and "directed them to make known to then clergy that his sentiments on the Coronation Oath, and on the Catholic question were . those his revered father, George III, and lamented brother, the Duke of York, had maintained during their lives, and which he himself had professed when Prince of Wales, and which nothing could shake, finally, assuring them that the recent ministerial arrangements were the result of circumstances, to his Majesty equally unforceeen and unpleasant "1 And when political necessity had wrung from Sir Robert Peel and the Duke of Wellington, a conviction that a measure of relief could no longer be withheld, it was with extreme difficulty that they obtained his assent to its introduction 2 After he had given his consent, he retracted, and again vielded it - attempted to deny, or explain it away to his anti-Catholic advisers - complained of his numisters, and claimed the pity of his friends ...... I do give my assent," said he, "I'll go to the baths abroad, and from thence to Hanover I'll return no more to England . Ill return no more let them get a Catholic king in Clarence" Such had once been the threat of the stout old king, who, whatever his faults, at least had firmness and strength of will But the king who now uttered these feeble lamentations, found solace in his trouble, by throwing his arms round the neck of the aged Eldon 8 And again, in imitation of his father, having assented to the passing of the Act, which he had dehberately authorised his ministers to carry, -he gratified his animosity against those who Speech of the Bishop of London * Peel's Mem , 1 271, &c , and at a dinner of the clergy of his docess, 8th May, 1827, Duke of Buckingham's Memona of George

VOL 7

¹ Aves 216, Noes 101 — Hansen d's "I hem Lady Conyngham supports to Debates, 2nd Sen , vn. 1266 tit, which is a great thing,"—Duka "i "I hem in to ito it," saud the of Buksubplant's Hanen's George Duko of Wellmatton to Mi. Frementle "By the by," he added, "'hull, 1103, 100, 211

1Va u. 824, Gentleman's Mags3 Twiss's Life of Eldon, in 82—
1Va v. 824, Gentleman's Mags3 Peel's Mem., 1 343—350

had supported it, --particularly the peers and bishops,-by marked incivility at his levée, while he loaded with attentions, those who had distinguished themselves by opposition to the government 1

This concession to the Roman Catholics, - which the ablest statesmen of all parties concurred in sunporting, -had already been delayed for thaty years, by the influence of the Crown Happily this influence had now fallen into weaker hands , or it might still have prevailed over wiser counsels, and the grave interests of the state.

Hitherto we have seen the influence of the Crown Reign of mvariably exercised against a liberal policy, and often W against the rights and liberties of the people. But the earlier years of the reign of William IV presented the novel spectacle of the prerogatives and personal influence of the king being exerted, in a great popular cause. on behalf of the people At various times, small expedients had seen tried with a view to restrain the influence of the Crown, but the Reform Bill, by increasing the real power of the people in the House of Commons, was the first great measure calculated to effect that object, and this measure, it was everywhere proclaimed that the king himself approved The ministers themselves announced his Majesty's entire confidence in their policy, and his determination to support them2, and the advocates of the cause, in every part of the country, declared that the king was on their side. . Yet, in truth, the attitude of the king in regard to this measure, at first resembled that which his royal predecessors had maintained against a progressive pohey When ministers first proposed to introduce it, he regarded it with dislike and apprehension he dreaded the increasing influence and activity of the Commons, and,—alarmed by the spirit in which they had investigated the expenditure of his civil list,—he feared lest, strengthened by a more popular representation, they should encroach upon his own prerogatives and independence. The royal family and the court were also averse to the measure, and to the ministers. But when his Majesty had given his consent to the scheme submitted by the calinet, he was giatified by its popularity,—in which he largely shared,—and which its supporters adioitly contrived to associate with his Majesty's personal chinacter, and supposed political sympathies.

Twiss's Life of Eldon, in 88 Easter Monday, 1831 Twiss's Life 2 At the Lord Mayor's Dinner, of Eldon, in. 126.

He was still distrustful of his ministers and then policy, yet while the tide of popular favour was running high, and no political danger was immediately impending, he gave them his support and countenance. On their side, they were not slow to take advantage of the influence of his name they knew that it would be a tower of stiength to their cause, and, sensible of the insecurity of his favour, they took care that it should be widely proclaimed, as long as it lasted.

Politicians hke Lord Eldon, who, for forty years, had rehed upon the influence of the Crown to tesist every popular measure,—even when proposed by its own responsible numsters,—were now scandalised by this "unconstitutional" cry <sup>2</sup> Yet what did this cry, in truth, import? The state of paties in Palhament, and of popular feeling in the country, had brought into the king's service, a munistry pledged to the cause of Parliamentary Roebuck's Hist. of the Whig Twiss's Life of Eldon, in 126. Hinistry, u 27, 28.

1 eform To this ministry he had given his confidence George III , by some bold stroke or cunning managuvre. would soon have set lumself free from such a ministry. George IV, after giving a doubtful assent to their policy, would have reserved his confidence and his sympathies for theu opponents, but William IV at this time, took a part at once manly and constitutional His responsible ministers had advised the passing of a great measure, and he had accepted their advice. They were now engaged in a fierce parliamentary struggle. and the kmg gave them, -what they were entitled to expect,-his open confidence. So long as they enloved this confidence, he exercised his prerogatives and influence according to their counsels. His powers were used in the spirit of the constitution,-not independently, or secretly, -but on the avowed advice and 1 esponsibility of his ministers

The kmg was called upon, at a critical period, to Descition exercise his prerogative of dissolving Parlament. In of 1881. All all and Parlament was yet in its first session, but having been assembled under the auspices of the late administration, before the popular feelings in favour of Parlamentary reform had been accused, it had become evident that a reform ministry, and this Parlament, could not exist together. The ministers, having been twice defeated in three days!, had no alternative but to resign their offices, or to appeal from the House of Commons to the people, and they urged the necessity of an immediate dissolution. The time was full of peril, and the king hesitated to adopt the bold advice of his ministers, but when at length he yielded his assent, the prerogative was exercised at once, and by the king

&lt;sup>1</sup> First, on General Gascogne's waids on a question of adjournment, amendment, 19th April, and atter- 21st April

in person 1 If there was something unseemly in the haste with which this was done, and unusual in the manner of dong it,-the occasion was one demanding the momptest action Lord Wharnchife had given notice of a motion for an address to the king, remonstrating against a dissolution, and his motion was actually under discussion in the House of Lords, when the king arrived to prorogue Parliament 2 Both houses would probably have joined in such an address, had time been allowed them, and would have interposed embariassing obstacles to the exercise of the king's prerogative this sudden appeal to the people, ministers at once deprived their opponents of the vantage-ground of parliamentary opposition

Second Reform Bill, 1831

The dissolution resulted in an overpowering majority of the new House of Commons, in favour of the government Reform Bill. And now the House of Lords, exercising its constitutional right, rejected it. So important a measure was trying all the powers of the state, to their utmost tension The popular excitement was so great that it was impossible for ministers to yield The king still upheld them, and the Commons supported them by a vote of confidence All the political forces of the country were thus combined against the House of Lords

Third Reform Bill. 1831-32

After a short protogation, a third Reform Bill was passed by the Commons The position of the Lords was now too pendous not to cause some wavening, and the second reading of the bill was accordingly agreed to, by the small majority of nine This concession, however, was followed by an adverse vote in committee A graver question of prelogative had now to be considered

<sup>1</sup> For an account of the interview

&lt;sup>2</sup> Hansaid's Debates, 31d Ser , 111 between the king and Lords Grey 1806, Roebuch's Hist of the Whig and Brougham, see Roebuck's Hist Ministry, u 152, Ann Register,

An appeal from the House of Commons to the people Proposed had been decisive, but what appeal was there from the peas House of Lords? None, save to the Crown, to which 8th May, that body owed its existence. A creation of peers was the ultima ratio, which after serious doubts and misowners, ministers submitted to the king. His Maiesty's resolution had already been shaken by the threatening aspect of affairs, and by the apprehensions of his family and court, and he, not unnaturally, shrank from so startling an exercise of his prerogative 1 The ministers resigned, and the Commons addressed the king, praying him to call such persons only to his conneils, as would momote the passing of the Reform Bill 2 The Duke of Wellington having failed to form a government, ready to devise a measure of reform at once satisfactory to the people and to the House of Lords, the ministers were recalled

Another pressure was now brought to bear upon the Influence House of Lords,—n regular and unconstitutional indeed, of the king but necessary to avert revolution on the one hand, and peers to save the peers from harsh coercion, on the other The king having at length agreed to create a sufficient number of peers to carry the bill 9,-yet anxious to avoid so extreme a measure - averted the dangers of a great political crisis, by a timely interference Some of the most violent peers were first dissuaded from proceeding to extremities, and on the 17th May, the following cucular letter was addressed, without the knowledge of ministers, to the opposition peers .-

"MY DEAR LORD,-I am honoured with his Majesty's commands to accusant your loadship, that all difficulties to the arrangements in progress will be obviated by a declaration in the House to-night from a sufficient number of peers, that in consequence of the present state of affairs, they have come to the resolution of dropping their further opposition to the Reform Bill, so that it may pass without delay, and as nearly as possible in its present shape

<sup>1</sup> Rocbuck's Hist of the Whig 2 Roebuck's Hist of the Whig Ministry, ii 222-227, 281

<sup>2</sup> See also Chapters V and VI Ministry, ii 331

"I have the honour to be, &c.,
"HERRERT TAYLOR"

The peers took this suggestion, and yielded. Had they continued their resistance, a creation of peers could not have been avoided. This interference of the king with the independent deliberations of the House of Lords was, in truth, a more unconstitutional act than a creation of peers,—the one being an irregular interference of the Crown with the fleedom of Parhament,—the other merely the unusual exercise of an undoubted pierogative. But it was resorted to, not to extend the influence of the Crown, or to overawe the Parhament,—but to restore harmonious action to those powers of the state, which had been brought into dangerous opposition and conflict. In singular contrast to the history of past times, the greatest extension of the liberties of the people was now obtained, in the last resort, by the influence of the Crown

The Whigs love the confidence of the king

In the last resort, by the immense of the Crown
Two years after these great events, the preorgatives of the Crown were again called into activity, in a manner which seemed to revive the political history of 1784.
Lond Grey's government had lost the confidence of the king. His Maje-ty had already become apprehensive of dangen to the Chuich, when his alaim was increased by the retinement of Lond Stanley, Sn. J. Graham, and two ofher members of the cabinet, on the question of the appropriation of the surplus revenues of the Chuich of Ireland. And without consulting his ministers, he gave public expression to this alarm, in replying to an address of the prelates and clergy of Ireland. The ministry of

&lt;sup>1</sup> Roebuck's Hist of the Whig <sup>2</sup> Annual Register, 1834, p. 43. Ministry, u. 334.

Lord Giev, enfeebled by the retirement of their colleagues, by disumon, and other embarrassments, soon afterwards resigned Though they had already lost their popularity, they had continued to command a large ma-1011ty in the House of Commons Lord Melbourne's administration which succeeded, was composed of the same materials, and represented the great liberal party, and its parliamentary majority Loid Melbourne had concluded the business of the session of 1834, with the full support of this majority But the king, who had withdrawn his confidence from Loid Grev, reposed it still less m Lord Melbourne,—having, in the mean time, become entirely converted to the political opinions of the Opposition

In October, the death of Lord Spencer having removed Theu sud-Lord Althorp from the leadership of the House of Comdendership salm 1834. mons, and from his office of Chancellor of the Exchequer, the king seized upon this opportunity for suddenly dismissing his ministers, and consulted the Duke of Wellington upon the formation of a government, from the opposite party. Lord Althorp's elevation to the House of Lords rendered necessary a partial reconstruction of the ministry; but assuredly that cucumstance alone would not have suggested the propriety of taking counsel with those who constituted but a small minouty of the House of Commons Lord Melbourne proposed to supply the place of Lord Althorn by Lord John Russell,-a far abler man, but the king was determined that the ministry should be dissolved. All the usual grounds for dismissing a ministry were want-There was no immediate difference of opinion between them and the king, upon any measure, or question of public policy,-there was no disunion among themselves, nor were there any indications that they had lost the confidence of Parhament. But the accidental removal of a single minister,-not necessarily even from the government, but only from one House of Parliament to the other, -was made the occasion for dismissing the entire administration. It is time that the king viewed with apprehension the policy of his ministers in regard to the hish Church, but his assent was not then required to any specific measure of which he disapproved - nor was this the ground assigned for their dismissal The right of the king to dismiss his ministers was unquestionable; but constitutional usage has prescribed certain conditions under which this right should be exercised. It should be exercised solely in the interests of the state, and on grounds which can be justified to Parliament, - to whom, as well as to the king, the ministers are responsible Even in 1784, when George III had determined to crush the Coalition Ministry, he did not venture to dismiss them, until they had been defeated in the House of Lords, upon M1 Fox's India Bill And again, in 1807, the ministers were at issue with the king upon a grave constitutional question, before he proceeded to form another ministry But here it was not directly alleged that the ministers had lost the confidence of the king, and so little could it be affirmed that they had lost the confidence of Parliament. that an immediate dissolution was counselled by the new administration The act of the king bore too much the impress of his personal will, and too little of those reasons of state policy by which it should have been prompted, but its impolicy was so signal as to throw into the shade its unconstitutional character

Temporary arrangements under the Duke of Welling-

The Duke of Wellington advised his Majesty that the difficult task of forming a new administration, should be entuisted to Sir Robert Peel But such had been the suddenness of the king's resolution, that Sin Robert, wholly unprepared for any political changes, was then at Rome The duke, however, promptly met this difficulty by accepting the office of First Lord of the Treasmy lumself, until Sir Robert Peel's arrival, together with the seals of one of his Majesty's Principal Secretaries of State, which,—as there was no other secretary.—constituted his grace Secretary for the Home, the Foreign and the Colomal Departments His sole colleague was Lord Lyndhuist, who was entusted with the Great Seal, but still returned the office of Lord Chief Baion of the Court of Exchequer

This assumption of the government by a single man, while Parhament was not sitting,—avowedly for the purpose of forming an administration from a party whose following comprised less than a fourth of the House of Commons,—presented an unpromising view of constitutional government, after the Reform Act of constitutional government, and the Recomm Act In defence of this concentration of offices, the precedent of the Duke of Shrewsbury was cited, who, in the last days of Queen Annie, had held the several offices of Lord High Treasurer, Lord Chambeilain, and Lord Lieutenant of Ireland <sup>2</sup> But the critical emergency of that occasion scaledy afforded an example to be followed, except where some public danger is to be averted The queen was upon her death-bed the succession was disputed,—a civil war was impending, —and the queen's ministers had been in seciet correspondence with the Pretender At such a time of peril, any means of strengthening the executive authoity were justifiable; but to resort to a similar expedient, when no danger threatened the state, and merely for the purpose of concerting ministerial arrangements and party combinations, - if justifiable on other grounds .- could scarcely be defended on the plea of precedent Its sustification, if possible, was rather to be sought in the temporary and provisional nature of the an angement The king had dismissed his ministers, and had resolved to entrust to Su Robert Peel the formation of another ministry. The accident of Sir Robert's absence deferred, for a time, the carrying out of his Majesty's resolution, and the Duke of Wellington, in the interval, administered the executive business of several departments of the Government, in the same manner as outgoing ministers generally undertake its administration, until their successors are appointed. The provisional character of this inter-ministerial government was shown by the circumstances stated by the duke himself, "that during the whole time he held the seals, there was not a single office disposed of, nor an act done, which was not essentially necessary for the service of the king, and of the country"1 That it was an expedient of doubtful and anomalous character, which, if drawn into precedent, might be the means of abuses dangerous to the state, - could scarcely be denied, but as the duke had exercised the extraordinary powers entitisted to him, with honour and good faith, his conduct, though exposed to invective, ridicule, and cancature 2, did not become an object of parliamentary censure Such was the temper of the House of Commons, that had the duke's "dictatorship." -as it was called,-been more open to animadversion. it had little to expect from their for bearance.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Sir Robert Peel himself appears to have admitted that he bottes, 3rd Ser, xxvi 293* could not have depended upon <sup>2</sup> Hansard's Deb, 3rd Sen, xxvi unose than 130 votes —Special of 224

<sup>1</sup> Duke of Wellington's Explana-

<sup>2</sup> H B represented the duke, in tions, Feb 24, 1835, Hansard's multiform characters, occupying Deb, 3rd Ser, xxvii 85.

If any man could have accomplished the task which Si Robert the king had so inconsiderately imposed upon his mer, 1834 minister, Sir Robert Peel was unquestionably the man most likely to succeed He perceived at once the impossibility of meeting the existing House of Commons, at the head of a Torv administration; and the king was therefore advised to dissolve Parliament

So completely had the theory of munisterial responsibility been now established, that, though Sir Robert the responsibility of Peel was out of the realm when the late ministers the king's were dismissed, - though he could have had no cogmzance of the causes which induced the king to dismiss them, - though the Duke of Wellington had been invested with the sole government of the country. without his knowledge, - he yet boldly avowed that, by acceptang office after these events, he became constitutionally responsible for them all.—as if he had himself advised them 1 He did not attempt, like the ministers of 1807, to absolve himself from censure for the acts of the Crown, and at the same time to denounce the criticism of Parhament, as an airgionment of the personal conduct of the king but manfully accepted the full responsibility which had devolved upon him

The minister could scarcely have expected to obtain The new a majority in the new Parhament, but he rehed upon Paintthe reaction in favour of Tory principles, which he knew to have commenced in the country, and which had encouraged the king to dismiss Lord Melbourne His party was greatly strengthened by the elections, but was still unequal to the force of the Opposition. Yet he hoped for for bearance, and a "fair trial," and trusted to the eventual success of a policy as liberal, in its general outline, as that of the Whigs But he had only disappointments and provocations to endure A hostile and enraged majority confronted him in the House of Commons, -- comprising every section of the "liberal party," - and determined to give him no quarter. He was defeated on the election of the Speaker, where at least he had deemed hunself secure, and again upon the address, when an amendment was voted condemning the recent dissolution as unnecessary 1, and, -not to mention minor discomfitures,-he was at length defeated on a resolution, affirming that no measure on the subject of tithes in Ireland would be satisfactory, that did not provide for the appropriation of the surplus revenues of the Tush Church.2

1 Hansard's Deb., 3rd Ser., xxv1 216, 223

These few weeks formed the most brilliant episode in Sir Robert Peel's distinguished parliamentary career He combined the temper, tact, and courage of a great political leader, with oratory of a higher order than he had ever previously attained. He displayed all the great qualities by which Mr Pitt had been distinguished, in face of an adverse majority, with a more conciliating temper, and a bearing less haughty Under similar circumstances, perhaps, his success might have been equal But Mr Pitt had still a dissolution before him, supported by the vast influence of the Crown Sil Robert Peel had already tried that venture, under every disadvantage, -- and no resource was left him, but an honourable retirement from a hopeless struggle,

He resigned, and Lord Melbourne's government, with some alterations, was remstated The stroke of prerogative had failed, and its failure offers an instructive

&lt;sup>1</sup> It lamented that the progress of to which the wishes of the people reforms should have been interwere most anniously and justly
rupted and endangered by the unnecessary dissolution of a PailaHansard's Deb, vxvi, 3id Ser, 26, ment earnestly intent upon the 151, 410, 425 vigorous prosecution of measures, 2 Com Jomn, xc 208.

illustration of the effects of the Reform Act, in duninishing the ascendant influence of the Crown In George the Thud's time, the dismissal of a ministry by the king, and the transfer of his confidence to their opponents .- followed by an appeal to the country .would certainly have secured a majority for the new ministers Such had been the effect of a dissolution in 1784, after the dismissal of the Coalition Ministry such had been the effect of a dissolution in 1807, on the dismissal of "All the Talents" But the failure of this attempt to convert Pailiament from one policy to another, by the prerogative and influence of the Crown, proved that the opinion of the people must now be changed, before ministers can reckon upon a conversion of the Parliament. It is true that the whole of these proceedings had been ill advised on the part of the king, even in the interests of the party whom he was anxyous to serve, but there had been times within the memory of many statesmen then hving, when equal indiscretion would not have incurred the least risk of defeat

The second ministry of Lord Melbourne, though Lord Melrapidly sinking in the estimation of their own supporters, second -and especially of the extreme, or "radical" party,while then opponents were gaming strength and popularity in the country.-continued in office during the two remaining years of the king's reign, without recovering his favour

Her Majesty, on her most auspicious accession to the Accession of he Mathrone, finding them the ministers of the Crown, mmediately honoured them with her entire confidence. The occasion was especially favourable for ministers to secure and perpetuate such confidence The young queen, having no political experience, was without predilections, and the impressions first made upon her mind

Her house- were likely to be lasting A royal household was immediately to be organised for her Majesty, comprising not merely the officers of state and ceremony, but, -what was more important to a queen, -all the ladies of her court The ministers appointed the former, as usual, from among their own parhamentary supporters, and extended the same principle of selection to the latter Nearly all the ladies of the new court were related to the ministers themselves, or to their political adherents The entire court thus became identified with the ministers of the day If such an arrangement was calculated to ensure the confidence of the Crown, -and who could doubt that it was ?-it necessarily involved the principle of replacing this household with another, on a change of This was for eseen at the time, and soon afterwards became a question of some constitutional difficulty

The "Bed-

The favour of the ministers at court became a subject chamber Question" of jealousy, and even of reproach, amongst their opponents, but the age had passed away, in which count favour alone could uphold a falling ministry against public opinion They were weaker now, with the court on their side, than they had been during the late reign, with the influence of the king and his court opposed to them; and m May, 1839, were obliged to offer their resignation. Sir Robert Peel, being charged with the formation of a new administration, had to consider the peculiar position of the household Since Lord Mona's memorable negotiations in 1812, there had been no difficulties regarding those offices in the household, which were included in ministerial changes; but the court of a queen, constituted like the present, raised a new and embarrassing question 1 To remove from the society of her Majesty, those ladies who were immediately about her person, appeared like an interference with her family circle, rather than with her household Yet could ministers undertake the government, if the queen continued to be surrounded by the wives, sisters and near relatives of their political opponents? They decided that they could not, and Sir Robert Peel went to the palace to acquaint her Majesty that the ministerial changes would comprise the higher offices of her court occupied by ladies, including the ladies of her bedchamber. The queen met him by at once declaring that she could not admit any change of the ladies of her household On appealing to Lord John Russell on this subject, her Majesty was assured that she was justified, by usage, in declining the change proposed, and afterwards, by the advice of Loid Melbouine and his colleagues, she addressed a letter to Sir Robert Peel, stating that she could not " consent to adopt a course which she conceived to be contrary to usage, and which was repugnant to her feelings "1 Sir Robert Peel, on the receipt of this letter, wrote to her Majesty to resign the trust he had undertaken . stating that it was essential to the success of the commission with which he had been honoured "that he should have that public proof of her Majesty's entire support and confidence, which would be afforded by the permission to make some changes in that part of her Majesty's household, which her Majesty resolved on maintaining entirely without change "2 By a minute of the cabinet, immediately after these events, the ministry of Lord Melbourne recorded their opinion "that for the purpose of giving to the administration that character of efficiency and stability, and those marks of constitutional support of the Crown, which are required to enable it to

Hansard's Debates, 3rd Ser, xlvii 985, et seq, and see supra, p 105

&lt;sup>1</sup> Hansaid's Debates, 3rd Series, xlvn 985
<sup>2</sup> Ibid, 986
VOL. I
K

act usefully to the public service, it is reasonable that the great offices of the court, and situations in the household held by members of Pailiament, should be included in the political arrangements made on a change of the administration, but they are not of opinion that a similar principle should be applied, or extended, to the offices held by ladies in her Maiesty's household "1

In the ministerial explanations which ensued, Sir Robert Peel pointed out forcibly the difficulties which any minister must be prepared to encounter, who should leave about her Majesty's person, the nearest relatives of his political opponents It had not been his intention to suggest the removal of ladies.—even from the higher offices of the household.--who were free from strong party or political connexion , but those who were nearly related to the outgoing ministers, he had deemed it impossible to retain The ministers, on the other hand, maintained that they were supported by precedents, in the advice which they had tendered to her Majesty They referred to the examples of Lady Sunderland and Lady Rialton, who had remained in the bedchamber of Queen Anne, for a year and a half after the dismissal of their husbands from office, and to the uniform practice by which the ladies of the household of every queen consort had been retained, on changes of administration, notwithstanding their close relationship to men engaged in political life The ministers also insisted much upon the respect due to the personal feelings of her Majesty, and to her natural repugnance to sacrifice her domestic society to political arrangements 2

Increased weakness of Lord The "Bedchamber Question" saved Lord Melbourne's government for a further term Sir Robert Peel had experienced the evil consequences of the late king's prema- Melture recall of his party to office, and his prospects in the boune's country were not even yet assured The immediate ment result of the Bedchamber Question was, therefore, not less satisfactory to himself than to the ministers. The latter gained no moral strength, by owing their continuance in office to such a cause, while the former was prepared to profit by their increasing weakness. The queen's confidence in her ministers was unduminished, yet they continued to lose ground in Parliament, and in the country In 1841, the Opposition, being fully assured of their growing strength, obtained, by a majority of one, a resolution of the Commons, affirming that the ministers had not the confidence of the House, and "that then continuance in office, under such circumstances, was at variance with the spirit of the constitution" The country was immediately appealed to upon this issue, and it soon became clear that the country was also adverse to the ministers Delay had been fatal to them, while it had assured the triumph of their opponents At the meeting of the new Parliament, amendments to the address were agreed to m both Houses.

Hansard's Debates, 3rd Ser alvn 1001

House of Commons 1 Sir Robert Peel was now called upon, at a time of Sir Robert his own choosing, to form a government Supported Beerly addressed and by Parliament and the country, he had nothing to fear ministrafrom court influence, even if there had been any disposition to use it against him. No difficulties were again by large majorities, repeating the verdict of the late raised on the Bedchamber Question. Her Majesty The house was now sensible that the position she had once been advised to assert, was constitutionally untenable. The primciple which Sn Robert Peel applied to the household, has since been admitted, on all sides, to be constitutional. The offices of mistress of the tobes and ladies of the bed-chamber, when held by ladies connected with the outgoing ministers, have been considered as included in the ministerial arrangements. But ladies of the bedchamber belonging to families whose political connexion has been less pronounced, have been suffered to remain in the household, without objection, on a change of ministry

1 In the Lords by a majority of 72, and in the Commons by a ma-1011ty of 91.

In 1851, an incident occurred which illustrates the relo-tions of ministers to the Crown.—the discretion vested in Relations of a secretary of state to the Crown

them, and the circumstances under which the pleasure of the sovereign is to be signified, concerning acts of the executive government To all important acts, by which the Crown becomes committed, it had been generally acknowledged that the sanction of the sovereign must be previously signified And in 1850 her Majesty communicated to Lord Palmerston, the secretary of state for foreign affairs,—through Lord John Russell, her first minister. a memorandum, giving specific dijections as to the transaction of business between the Crown and the secretary of state. It was in these words -"The queen requires, first, that Lord Palmerston will distinctly state what he proposes in a given case, in order that the queen may know as distinctly to what she is giving her royal sanction. Secondly, having once given her sanction to a measure, that it be not arbitrarily altered or modified by the minister Such an act she must consider as failing in smeerity towards the Crown, and justly to be visited by the exercise of her constitutional right of dismissing that minister She expects to be kept informed of what passes between him and the foreign ministers, before important decisions are taken, based upon that intercourse. to

The queen's memorandum, 1850 receive the foreign despatches in good time, and to have the drafts for her approval, sent to her m sufficient time to make herself acquainted with their contents. before they must be sent off"1

Such being the relations of the foreign secretary to the Crown, the sovereign is advised upon questions of foreign policy by her first minister, to whom copies of despatches and other information are also communicated, in order to enable him to give such advice effectually 2 In controlling one minister, the sovereign vet acts upon the counsels and responsibility of another

Immediately after the coup d'état of the 2nd Decem- Lord Pulber, 1851, in Paus, the cabinet determined that the Go-merston's vernment of this country should abstain from any inter- from office ference in the internal affairs of France, and a despatch to that effect, approved by the queen, was addressed to Lord Normanby, the British ambassador in Paris, But before this official communication was written, it appeared that M Walewski, the French ambassador at the Court of St James's, had assured his own Government, that Lord Palmerston had "expressed to him his entire approbation of the act of the president, and his conviction that he could not have acted otherwise than he had done" This statement having been communicated to Lord Normanby by M. Turgot, was reported by him to Lord Palmerston On receiving a copy of Lord Normanby's letter, Lord John Russell immediately wrote to Lord Palmerston reguming explanations of the variance between his verbal communications with the French ambassador, and the despatch agreed upon by the cabinet; and a few days afterwards her Majesty

fore Solect Committee on Official

&lt;sup>1</sup> Hansaid's Debates, 3rd Series, Salaries Statement by Lord J rix 90 Russell , Hansaid's Debates, 3rd Sn Robert Peel's evidence be- Series, cxix 91,

also demanded similar explanations. These were delayed for several days , and in the mean time, in reply to another letter from Lord Normanby, Lord Palmerston. on the 16th of December, wrote to his lordship, explaining his own views in favour of the policy of the recent coun d'état On receiving a copy of this correspondence. Lord John Russell conceived that the secretary of state was not justified in expressing such opinions, without the sanction of the Crown and the concurrence of the cabmet.-more particularly as these opinions were opposed to the policy of non-intervention upon which the cabinet had determined, and inconsistent with that moral support and sympathy, which England had generally offered to constitutional government in foreign countries The explanations which ensued were not deemed satisfactory, and Lord Palmerston was accordingly removed from office, on the ground that he had exceeded his authority as secretary of state, and had taken upon himself alone, to be the organ of the queen's government

In defence of his own conduct, Lord Palmeiston, while fully recognizing the principles upon which a secretary of state is required to act in relation to the Crown and his own colleagues, explained that his conversation with Count Walewski on the 8rd of December, and his explanatory letter to Lord Normanby on the 16th, were not inconsistent with the policy of non-intervention upon which the cabinet had resolved, that whatever opinions he might have expressed, were merely his own, and that he had given no official instructions or assurances on the part of the Government, except in the despatch of the 5th of December, which her Majesty and the cabinet had approved

Though the premier and the secretary of state had

Explanations of Lord J. Russell, Feb 3, 1852.

differed as to the propriety of the particular acts of the latter, they were agreed upon the general principles which regulate the relations of ministers to the Crown These events exemplify the effective control which the Crown constitutionally exercises in the government of the country The policy and conduct of its ministers are subject to its active supervision. In minor affairs the ministers have a separate discretion, in their several departments, but in the general acts of the government. the Crown is to be consulted, and has a control over them all

*From this time no question has alisen concerning Wise uso of the influthe exercise of the prerogatives or influence of the the influence of the Crown, which calls for notice Both have been exer- Crown, in cised wisely, justly, and in the true spirit of the constitution Ministers, emoving the confidence of Parliament, have never claimed in vain the confidence of the Crown Their measures have not been thwarted by secret influence, and irresponsible advice. Their policy has been directed by Parliament and public opinion. and not by the will of the sovereign, or the intrigues of the court Vast as is the power of the Crown, it has been exercised, throughout the present leigh, by the advice of responsible ministers, in a constitutional manner, and for legitimate objects. It has been held in trust, as it were, for the benefit of the people Hence it has ceased to excite either the jealousy of rival parties, or popular discontents

This judicious exercise of the royal authority, while it has conduced to the good government of the state, has sustained the moral influence of the Crown; and the devoted loyalty of a free people, which her Majesty's personal virtues have merited, has never been disturbed by the voice of faction.

General increase of the influence of the Crown

But while the influence of the Crown in the government of the country, has been gradually brought into subordination to Parliament and public opinion, the same causes, which, for more than a century and a half, contributed to its enlargement, have never ceased to add to its greatness The national expenditure and public establishments have been nicreased to an extent which alarms financiers, armies and navies have been maintained, such as at no former period had been endured in time of peace. Our colonies have expanded into a vast and populous empire, and her Majesty, invested with the sovereignty of the East Indies, now rules over two hundred millions of Asiatic subjects Governors, commanders-in-chief, and bishops attest her supremacy in all parts of the world, and the greatness of the British empire, while it has redounded to the glory of England, has widely extended the influence of the Crown As that influence, constitutionally exercised, has ceased to be regarded with jealousy, its continued enlargement has been watched by Parliament without any of those efforts to restrain it, which marked the parliamentary history of the eighteenth century On the contrary. Parhament has met the increasing demands of a community rapidly advancing in population and wealth, by constant additions to the power and nationage of the Crown The judicial establishments of the country have been extended, by the appointment of more judges in the superior courts, - by a large staff of county court judges, with local jurisdiction, - and by numerous stipendiary magistrates Offices and commissions have been multiplied, for various public purposes; and all these appointments proceed from the same high source of patronage and preferment. Parliament has wisely excluded all these officers, with a few neces sary exceptions, from the privilege of sitting in the House of Commons, but otherwise these extensive means of influence have been entrusted to the executive government, without any apprehension that they will be perverted to uses injurious to the freedom, or public interests of the country

The history of the influence of the Crown has now Continued

been sketched, for a period of one hundred years. We great famihave seen George III jealous of the great Whig families, her and wresting power out of the hands of his ministers. we have seen ministers becoming more accountable to Parliament, and less dependent upon the Crown; but, as in the commencement of this period, a few great families commanded the support of Parliament, and engrossed all the power of the state. - so under a more free representation, and more extended responsibilities. do we see nearly the same families still in the ascendant Deprived in great measure of their direct influence over Parhament, - then general weight in the country, and in the councils of the state, has suffered little diminution Notwithstanding the more democratic tendencies of later times, rank and station have still retained the respect and confidence of the people. When the aristocracy have enloved too exclusive an influence in the government, they have aroused realousies and hostility, but when duly sharing power with other classes, and admitting the just claums of talent, they have prevailed over every rival and adverse interest, and, - whatever party has been in power, - have still been the rulers of the state

In a society comprising so many classes as that of England, the highest are willingly accented as governors, when their personal qualities are not imequal to their position. They excite less jealousy than ablei men of inferior social pretensions, who climb to power

Born and nurtured to influence, they have studied how to maintain it. That they have maintained it so well, against the encroachments of wealth,—an expanding society,—and popular influences, is mainly due to their progressive policy. As they have been ready to advance with their age, the people have been content to acknowledge them as leaders, but had they endeavoured to stem the tide of public opinion, they would have been swept aside, while men from other classes advanced to power.

CHAP III

THE PREROGATIVES OF THE CROWN, DURING THE MINORITY OR INCAPACITY

OF THE SOVEREIGN — ILLNESSES AND REGENCY OF GEORGE THE THIRD

LATER REGENCY ACTS

We have seen the prerogatives of the Crown wielded Presignation the plentitide of kingly power. Let us now turn Crown in aside for awhile, and view them as they lay ineit in sheyanes the powerlies hands of a stricken king.

The melancholy illnesses of George III., at different periods of his reign, involved political considerations of the highest importance,—affecting the prerogatives of the Crown, the rights of the royal family, the duties of ministers, and the authority of Parlament

The king was seized by the first of these attacks in First lift 1765. Though a young man, in the full vigour of hife, interest fee exhibited those symptoms of mental disorder, which 1766 were afterwards more seriously developed. But the knowledge of this melancholy circumstance was confined to his own family, and personal attendants 1 This illness, however, had been in other respects so alarming, that it led the king to consider the necessity of providing for a regency, in case of his death. The laws of England recognise no incapacity in the sovereign, by reason of nonage, and have made no provision for the guardianship of a king, or for the government of his kingdom, during his munority <sup>1</sup> Yet the common sense of every age has revolted against the anomaly of suffering the country to be piactically governed by an infant king. Hence special provision has been made for each occasion, according to the age and consanguinty of the surviving relatives of the inmor, and as such provision involves not only the care of an infant, but the government of the country, the sanction of Pailmment has necessarily been required, as well as that of the king.

Grenville Papers, m. 122, 'Adol-terly Review, Ixvi. 240, by Mi phus's History i 175, n, Quai-Orokei.

Regency Actof 1751

By the Regency Act of 1751, passed after the death of Frederick Prince of Wales, the Princess Dowagei of Wales had been appointed regent, in the event of the demise of George II before the Prince of Wales, or any other of her children succeeding to the throne, had attained the age of eighteen years. This act also nominated the council of regency, but empowered the king to add four other members to the council, by instruments under his sign manual, to be opened after his death. But this precedent deferred too much to the judgment of Parhament, and left too little to the discretion of the king himself, to be acceptable to George III. He desired to reserve to himself the testamentary disposition of his prerogatives, and to leave nothing to Parhament but the formal recognition of his power.

The king's flistscheme of siegency, 1766 The original scheme of the regency, as proposed by the king, in 1765, was as strange as some of the incidents connected with its further progress. He had formed it without any communication with his ministers, who consequently received it with distrust, as the work of

<sup>1</sup> at In judgment of law, the king, qualitie of the synull politique, as king, cannot be said to be an air-which as the greation and more near, for when the royal bothe political of the state of the Lord Bute and the king's friends, of whom they were sensitively jealous 1 The scheme itself was one to myste suspicion It was obviously proper, that the appointment of a regent should be expressly made by Parliament If the king had the nomination, there could be no certainty that any regent would be appointed .- he might become incapable and die intestate. as it were; and this contingency was the more probable. as the king's mind had recently been affected. But his Majesty proposed that Parliament should confer upon him the unconditional right of appointing any person as regent, whom he should select 2 Mr Grenville pressed him to name the regent in his speech, but was unable to persuade him to adopt that suggestion There can be little doubt that the king intended that the queen should be recent, but he was believed to be dving of consumptions, and was still supposed to be under the influence of his mother. The ministers feared lest the princess might eventually be appointed regent, and Lord Bute admitted to the council of regency. Some even went so far as to conceive the possibility of Loid Bute's nomination to the regency itself 4 It was ultimately airanged that the king Modeled should nominate the regent himself, but that his choice ly the misters should be restricted " to the queen and any other person of the royal family usually resident in England ," 5 and the scheme of the regency was proposed to Parliament upon that basis 6

Walpole's Mem, n 99, 104, the bill without naming the legent, Rockingham Mem, 1 183 on placing any limit on the lung's 2 Gienville Papers (Diary), m 126, 129

<sup>3</sup> Walpole's Mem, 11 98

<sup>4</sup> Ibid , n 101, 104 6 Cabinet Minute, 5th April , Gienville Papers, m 15, 16

<sup>6</sup> Lord John Russell says that the ministers "unwisely introduced

or placing any limit on the long's nomination" (Introduction to 3rd vol of Bedford Correspondence, XXIX) This was not precisely the fact, as will be seen from the text. but ministers were equally blamable for not insisting that the queen alone should be the regent

The king's speech

On the 24th of April, 1765, the king came down to Parliament and made a speech to both houses, recommending to their consideration the expediency of enabling him to appoint, " from time to time, by instrument m writing, under his sign manual, either the queen, or any other person of his royal family, usually residing in Great Britain, to be the guardian of his successor, and the regent of these kingdoms, until such successor shall attain the age of eighteen years,"subject to restrictions similar to those contained in the Regency Act, 24 Geo II . - and of providing for a council of recency A sount address was immediately agreed upon by both Houses, - ultra-loyal, according to the fashion of the time, - approaching his "sacred person" with "reverence," "affection," "admiration." and "gratitude," scarcely venturing to contemplate the possibility of "an event which, if it shall please God to permit it, must overwhelm his Majesty's loyal subjects with the bitterest distraction of grief," and promising to give immediate attention to recommendations which were the result of the king's "consummate prudence," "beneficent intention," "salutary designs," "princely wisdom," and "paternal concern for his people," 1

The Regency Bil 1765 A bill, founded upon the royal speech, was immodiately brought into the House of Lords. In the first draft of the bill, the king, following the precedent of 1751, had reserved to himself the right of nonmating four members of the council of regency, but on the 29th April, he sent a message to the Lords, desuring that his four brothers and his nucle, the Duke of Cumberland, should be specified in the bill, and reserving to himself the nomination of other persons, in the event of any vacancy 1 The bill was read a second time on the following day But first it was asked if the queen was naturalised, - and if not, whether she could lawfully be regent This question was referred to the judges, who were unanimously of opinion, "that an alien married to a king of Great Britain is, by operation of the law of the Crown (which is a part of the common law), to be deemed a natural-born subject from the time of such marriage, so as not to be disabled by the Act of the 12th William III, or by any other Act, from holding and enjoying any office or place of trust, or from having any grant of lands, &c , from the Crown "2 Then, suddenly a doubt arose whether the king's mother, the Princess of Wales, was comprehended in the "royal family" or not It was suggested that this term applied only to members of the royal family in the line of succession to the Crown, and would not extend beyond the descendants of the late king 8 There can be no question that the king, in his speech, had intended to include the princess; and even the doubt which was afterwards raised, was not shared by all the members of the cabinet. and by the Lord Chancellor was thought unfounded.<sup>4</sup> Whether it had occurred to those by whom the words had been suggested to the king, is doubtful

On the 1st May, Lord Lyttelton moved an address, Exclusion praying the king to name the regent, which was rejected On the 2nd, the Duke of Richmond moved an of Wales

Journ, xxx1 102 A memorial by Lord Lyttelton says, "While the bill was in the House of Lords, the clause naming the king's brothers was concerted, with the Duke of Cum-berland, unknown to the ministry 125—148, Walpole's Mcm, n till the king sent to them They, 118 to return the compliment, fiamed 2 Ibid, 148.

Walpole's Mem , n 109, Lords' the clause for omitting the princess dowager, and procured the king's consent to it"-Rockmyham Mem, amendment in committee, defining the persons capable of the regency to be the queen, the princess downger. and the descendants of the late king Strange as it may seem, the munsters resisted this amendment, and it was negatived 1 The doubt which had been thus laised concerning the Princess of Wales had not been removed, when, on the following day. Lord Halifax and Lord Sandwich had an audience of the king, and remesented, that if the Lords should insert the princess's name in the bill, the Commons would strike it out again, and that such an insult might best be avoided by not proposing her name at all 2. The king was taken by surprise, and either misunderstood the proposal, or failed to show his usual firmness and courage in resisting it 8 Lord Halifax at once proceeded to the House of Lords, and moved the recommitment of the bill, according to the alleged wishes of his Majesty, in order to make an amendment, which limited the regency to the queen, and the descendants of the late king, usually resident in England Thus, not satisfied with gaming then point, ministers had the cruelty and assurance to make the kine hmself bear the blame of proposing an affront to his own mother Well might Horace Walpole exclaim "And thus she alone is rendered incapable of the regency, and sugmatised by Act of Parliament ! "4

Lords' Journ, xxxx 174

The king had no sooner given his consent than he is collected from its consequences,—complained that he had been betrayed,—and endeavoured to obtain the miscrition of his mother's name. He could gain no satisfaction from his munisters , but in the Commons, the

Mem, 1 183.

<sup>3</sup> Walpole's Mem, u 125

<sup>5</sup> Grarville Rapers (Duary), un

149, and 154, n

friends of the princess, encouraged by the king himself. took up her cause, and, on the motion of Mr Morton. Chief Justice of Chester, which was not opposed by the ministers. — her name was inserted in the bill king had been assured that the Commons would strike replaced in the bill it out · and vet, after the House of Loids had omitted it, on the supposed authority of the king, there were only thirty-seven members found to vote against its insertion, while one hundred and sixty-seven voted in its favour 1, and in this form the bill passed

The Her name

Could any lover of mischief. - could Wilkes himself, - have devised more embarrassments and cross purposes, than were caused by this unlucky Regency Bill? Faction and intrigue had done their worst

The Regency Act2 provided for the nomination by the Piovisions king, under his sign-manual, of the queen, the Princess gency Act of Wales, or a member of the royal family descended from the late king, to be the guardian of his successor while under eighteen years of age, and "Regent of the Kingdom," and to exercise the royal power and prerogatives. His nomination was to be signified by three instruments, separately signed, and sealed up, and deposited with the Archbishop of Canterbury, the Lord Chancellor, and the President of the Council It attached the penalties of premunire to any one who should open these instruments during the king's life, or afterwards neglect or refuse to produce them before the privy council It appointed a council of regency, consisting of the king's brothers and his uncle, the Duke of different directions given to his servants in the two Houses, but still enforced the argument of this being moved by the gentlemen of the Opposition The king was in the utmost degree of agritation and emo-tion, even to tears "-Mr Grenville's

Diary, May 5th, 1765, Grenville Papers, m 154 Mi Gienville's Report of the Debate to the King, Grenville Papers, in 25, n, Walpole's Mem. George III, n 129-146. <sup>2</sup> 5 George III c. 27.

Cumberland, and several great officers of Church and State, for the time being In case any of the king's brothers or his uncle should die, or be appointed regent, it gave the king the power of nominating another person, being a natural-born subject, to the council of regency, by instruments under his hand in the same form as those appointing the regent. The act also defined the powers of the regent and council. On the demise of his Majesty, the privy council was directed to meet and proclaim his successor

The king's illness in 1788-9

The king's next illness was of longer duration, and of a more distressing character It was the occasion of another Regency Bill, and of proceedings wholly unprecedented In the summer of 1788, the king showed evident symptoms of derangement. He was able, however, to sign a warrant for the further prorogation of Parhament by commission, from the 25th September to the 20th November But, in the interval, the king's malady increased he was wholly deprived of reason, and placed under restraint, and for several days his life was in danger i As no authority could be obtained from him for a further prorogation, both Houses assembled on the 20th November, though they had not been summoned for despatch of business, and no causes of summons could be communicated to them, in the accustomed manner, by a speech from the throne These circumstances were explained in both Houses, and, on the suggestion of ministers, they agreed to adjourn for a fortnight, and to summon all their members, by circular letters, to attend nevel lay my head on my last pillow in peace and quist as long as I remember the loss of my American colonies. Lord Malin Con., 1v. 21. On a lates occasion, in 1801, the lang's mind showed equally stong feelings as to the supposed dangers of the Church.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Tomhne's Lafe of Pitt, 11 353, Lord Auckind's corn 1 240–296 in which we have a these, political ovents pressed heavily on the king's coloure's pressed heavily on the king's coloure's mand the Dike of Leeds, "Whatevee king's mind all you and Mr Pitt may think or feel, I, that am born a gentleman, shall of the Chuich

at their next meeting 1 According to long established law, Parliament, without being opened by the Crown, had no authority to proceed to any business whatever but the necessity of an occasion, for which the law had made no DI OVISION. WAS NOW SUDERFOR to the law, and Parliament secordingly proceeded to deliberate upon the momentous questions to which the king's illness had given rise.

In order to afford Parliament authentic evidence of Examinathe king's condition, his five physicians were examined king's phy-by the privy council on the 3rd December They agreed secures that the king was then incapable of meeting Parliament. or of attending to any business; but believed in the probability of his ultimate recovery, although they could not limit the time. On the following day this evidence was laid before both Houses but as doubts were suggested whether Parliament should rest satisfied without receiving the personal testimony of the physicians, it was afterwards agreed that a committee should be appointed, in each House, for that purpose In the Lords the committee was nominated by ballot, each peer giving in a list commitof twenty-one names 2 Meanwhile, all other business was bouted suspended In the Commons, the speaker even entertained doubts whether any new writs could be issued for supplying the places of members deceased, but Mr Pitt expressed a decided opinion, "that though no act could take place which required the joint concurrence of the different branches of the Legislature. vet each of them in its separate capacity was fully competent to the exercise of those powers which concerned its own orders and jurisdiction." And in this rational

view the House acquiesced

&lt;sup>1</sup> Pail Hist, xxvii 653, 685 <sup>2</sup> Pail Hist, xxvii 658 The House of Commons was also or- <sup>3</sup> Ibid, 688. dered to be called over on that day

Committees to scoop for mecedents

The reports of these committees merely confirmed the evidence previously given before the privy council. and the facts being thus established, a committee was moved for in either House, to search for precedents " of such proceedings as may have been had in case of the personal exercise of the royal authority being prevented or interrupted by infancy, sickness, infirmity, or otherwise, with a view to provide for the same " When this motion was made in the Commons, Mr Fox advanced the startling opinion that the Prince of Wales had as clear a right to exercise the power of sovereignty during the king's meanacity, as if the king were actually dead . and that it was merely for the two Houses of Parliament to pronounce at what time he should commence the exercise of his right 1 To assert an absolute right of inheritance during his father's life, in defiance of the well-known rule of law, "nemo est hæres viventis," was to argue that the heir-at-law is entitled to enter into possession of the estate of a lunatic. Mr Pitt, on the other hand, maintained that as no legal provision had been made for carrying on the government, it belonged to the Houses of Parliament to make such provision. He even went so far as to affirm, that "unless by their decision, the Prince of Wales had no more right-speaking of strict right-to assume the government, than any other individual subject of the country,"2 -a position as objectionable in one direction, as that of Mr Fox in the others, and which gave great umbrage to the prince and his friends. And here the two par> ties joined issue <sup>1</sup> Paul Hust, xxvn 707

Doctanes of Mr. Fox and Mr Date

constitutional authority of Pailia-ment, while that of Mr Pitt, tho 2 Ital 11889, XXVII 1011
2 Ital John Russell says, "The doctaine of Mr Fox, the popular the stability of the monachy, and leader, went far to set aside the

When next this matter was discussed, Mr Fox, Issue being sensible that he had pressed his doctaine of right taken beyond its constitutional limits, somewhat receded from tights of the Frince his first ground. He now spoke of the prince having a legal claim rather than a right to the regency, and contended that it was for Parliament to adjudicate upon that claim, which, when allowed, would become an absolute title to the exercise of all the rights of sovereignty, without any limitation He stated, also, that he spoke merely his own opinion, without any authority, but that if he had been consulted, he should have advised a message from the prince, stating his claim, to be answered by a roint address of both Houses, calling upon him to exercise the prerogatives of the Crown. It was now his main position that no iestrictions should be imposed upon the powers of the regent But here, again, Mr Pitt joined issue with him, and while he agreed that, as a matter of discretion, the Prince of Wales ought to be the regent, with all necessary authority. - unrestrained by any permanent council, and with a free choice of his political servants, - he yet contended that any power which was not essential, and which might be employed to embairass the exercise of the king's authority, in the event of his recovery, ought to be withheld 1 And as the question of right had been raised, he insisted that it ought first to be determined. - since if the right should be held to exist, Parliament having adjudicated upon such right, need not deliberate upon any further measures The same questions were debated in the House of The Pinner Lords, where the Duke of York said that no claim of disclaims succession"-Memorials of Fax, ii Dec 12th Parl Hist, xxvii 263

right had been made on the part of the prince, who "understood too well the sacred principles which seated the House of Brunswick on the thione, ever to assume or exercise any power, be his claim what it might, not derived from the will of the people, expressed by their representatives, and their loudships in Parliament assembled" His Royal Highness, therefore, deprecated pressing for any decision on the point, —in which the Duke of Gluicester concurred.

The prince offended by Mr Pitt's conduct the Duke of Gloucester concurred <sup>1</sup>

Meanwhile, the prince was greatly offended by Mr Pitt's conduct, and wrote to the chancellor complaning that the premier had publicly amounced somuch of his scheme of regency, and was prepared, as he conceived, to lay it still more fully before Parliament, without having previously submitted it to his consideration. He desired that Mr Pitt would send him, in writing, an outline of what he proposed. Mn. Pitt immediately wrote to the prince, explanning his own conduct, and stating that it was not his intention to propose any specific plan until the right of Parliament to consider such a plan had been determined, and that he would then submit to his Royal Highness the best opinions which his Majesty's servants had been able to give.<sup>2</sup>

Mr Pitt's preliminary iesolutions On the 16th December the House resolved itself into a committee on the state of the nation, when Mr. Pitt again enforced the right of Parlament to appoint a legent,—fortifying his position by reference to the report of precedents, which had then been received,—and arguing ably and claborately that neither law, precedent, nor analogy could be found to support the claim which had been urged on behalf of the Prince of Wales He concluded by moving three iesolutions, affirming, first, that the personal exercise of royal authority was interrupted; second, the right of the two Houses to supply the defect of the personal exercise of the royal authority, in such manner as the exigency of the case may seem to require, and, third, the necessity of "determining the means by which the royal assent may be given to bills passed by the two Houses respecting the exercise of the powers of the Crown, during the continuance of the king's midsposition."

Mr Fox argued, ingeniously, that the principles maintained by Mr. Pitt tended to make the monarchy elective instead of heieditary, and that if Parlament might elect any one to be regent, for whatever time it thought fit, the monarchy would become a republic. Nor did he omit to seek for support, by intimations that he should be Mr. Pitt's successor, under the regency.

On the report of these resolutions to the House <sup>1</sup>, Mr. Pitt explained (in reference to his third resolution, which had not been clearly understood), that he intended, when the resolutions had been agreed to by both Houses, to propose that the Lord Chancellor should be empowered, by a vote of the two Houses, to affix the Cheat Seal to commissions for opening the Pai hamont, and for giving the royal assent to a Regency Bill The propriety of this singular course of proceeding was much questioned; but, after long debates, the resolutions were agreed to, and communicated to the House of Lords at a conference. In that House the same questions were debated, and Lord Rawdon moved as an amendment, an address to the Prince of Wales, praying him "to take upon himself, as sole regent, the administration of the executive government, in the king's name" Lord Chancellor Thurlow .- though faithless to his colleagues, and intriguing, at the very time, with the queen and the Prince of Wales 1, - supported the ministerial position with creat force. In answer to Lord Rawdon's amendment, he "begged to know what the term 'regent' meant? where was he to find it defined? in what lawbook, or what statute? He had heard of custodes regni, of heutenants for the king, of guardians and protectors, and of lords justices, but he knew not where to look for an explanation of the office and functions of regent To what end, then, would it be to address the prince to take upon himself an office, the boundaries of which were by no means ascertained? What was meant by the executive government? Did it mean the whole 10 yal authority? Did it mean the power of legislation? Did it mean all the sovereign's functions without restriction or limitation of any kind whatsoever? If it did, it amounted to the actual dethroning of his Majesty, and wiesting the sceptre out of his hand "2 All the resolutions were agreed to, but were followed by a protest signed by forty-eight peers 8

&lt;sup>1</sup> Paul Hist., xxvii 782 Twiss's Life of Eldon, 1 191

Death of Mr Speaker Cornwall

The perplexities arising out of the incapacity of the sovereign, - the constitutional source and origin of authority - were now increased by the death of Mr

Tomline's Life of Pitt, m c 14, Wilberforce's Lafe, 1 App., Mone's Lafe of Sheridan, n 31, Loid Campbell's Lives of Chancellors, v 583, et seq 2 Pail Hist, xxvii 885 The office of legent, however, does not appear to be wholly without lecognition, as contended by the chancellor and others On the accession of Henry III, a minor, the groat council of the nation, assembled at Bristol, suppointed the Earl of Pem-

Nicholls's Recollections, 71, broke regent, as "Rector Rects at Regn: "(Matthew Paris, Wats' 2nd Ed, p 245, Carte's History of Eng, u 2), and when the Duke of York was appointed protector by the Parhament during the illness of Hen, VI , it is entered in the rolls of Parhament that the title of regent was not given him, because " it emported auctor ite of governaunce of the lands "

Rot Parl, v 242, A D 1454, Ry-men's Foedera, v 55 Fal Hist, xxvn 901.

Cornwall, the Speaker of the House of Commons. His Majesty's leave could not be signified that the Commons should proceed to the election of another speaker, nor could the new speaker, when elected, be presented for the king's approval But the necessity of the occasion suggested an easy expedient, and both these customary formalities were simply dispensed with, without any attempt to assume the appearance of the royal sanction 1

All these preliminaries being settled, Mr Pitt now Mr Pitt submitted to the Pince of Wales the plan of regency scheme which he intended to propose. The limitations sug- to the gested were these -that the care of the king's person and household, and the appointment of officers and servants, should be reserved to the queen - that the regent should not be empowered to dispose of the real or personal property of the king, or to grant any office in reversion, or any pension or office, otherwise than during pleasure, except those which were required to be granted for life, or during good behaviour; or to bestow any peerage except upon his Majesty's issue, having attained the age of twenty-one 2 These limitations were suggested, he said, on the supposition that the king's illness would not be of long duration, and might afterwards be revised by Parliament

The plince's reply to this communication was a most The skilful composition, written by Burke and revised by pri Sheridan 8 He regarded the restrictions as "a project for producing weakness, disorder, and insecurity in every branch of the administration of affairs.—a project for dividing the royal family from each other, for sepanating the court from the state, -a scheme disconnecting the authority to command service, from the power of animating it by reward, and for allotting to the prince all the invidous duties of government, without the means of softening them to the public, by any act of grace, favour, or benignity" And he repudiated as unnecessary, the restriction upon his granting away the king's property, - a power which he had shown no inclination to possess 1

&lt;sup>1</sup> Parl Hist, xxvn 903, 1160 <sup>3</sup> Moore's Lafe of Sheridan, n. <sup>2</sup> Tomline's Lafe of Pitt, n 422 <sup>50</sup>. Parl Hist, xxvii, 909.

Further mguiries concerning the king's health.

But before Mr Pitt was able to bring his proposals before Parliament, fresh discussions were raised by the Opposition on the state of the king's health, which resulted in another examination of his physicians by a select committee The inquiry lasted for several days select committee the inquiry insect to several any but, while it disclosed much party spirit, intigue, and jealousy, it established no new facts concerning the probable recovery of the royal patient. The least hopeful physicians were popular with the Opposition the more sanguine found favour with the court and

gency

Further re- the ministers At length, on the 19th January, Mi on the re- Pitt moved, in committee on the state of the nation, five resolutions on which the Regency Bill was to be founded After animated debates they were all agreed to, and communicated at a conference to the Lords, by whom they were also adopted; but not without a protest signed by fifty-seven peers, headed by the Dukes of York and Cumberland

Laid before the prince

The next step was to lay these resolutions before the prince, and to ascertain whether he would accept the regency, with the conditions attached to it by Parhament The resolutions were accordingly presented by both Houses, and the pince, out of respect for his father, the interests of the people, and the united desires of the two Houses, consented to undertake the trust.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Tomline's Life of Pitt, n 425.; 2 Commons' Journ , xhv. 47 Pail. Hist, xxvii 910.

though he felt the difficulties which must attend its execution The resolutions were also presented to the queen, and received a gracious answer

Another technical difficulty was still to be overcome commisbefore the Regency Bill could, at last, be introduced. someon of Parliament had not yet been opened, nor the causes of Parliament summons declared, in a speech from the throne,-formalities always held to be essential to enable Parliament to proceed with its legislative business. It was now proposed, by a vote of both Houses, to authorise the Jan at. passing of letters patent under the great seal, for the 1789 opening of Parliament by commission. The necessity of adopting this expedient had been already intimated, and had been described as a "phantom" of royalty, a "fiction," and a "forgery" It was now formally proposed by ministers, on the ground that the opening of Parliament, by royal authority was essential to the validity of its proceedings; that during the king's incapacity such authority could only be signified by a commission under the great seal, that without the direction of both Houses, the Lord Chancellor could not venture to affix the seal, but that the commission being once issued, with the great seal annexed to it, - the instrument by which the will of the king is declared no one could question its legality 2 It was also stated that the 10val assent would hereafter be signified to the Regency Bill by commission, executed in the same way A precedent in 1754 was further relied on, in which Lord Hardwicke had affixed the great seal to two commissions,—the one for opening Parliament, and the other for passing a bill, during a dangerous illness of George II 8

&lt;sup>1</sup> Parl Hist, xxyn 1122 Camden. In the latter this pie-<sup>2</sup> Lord Camden's Speech Parl cedent is erioneously assigned to Hist, xxyn 1124 739

Speeches of Mi. Prit and Load

It was contended on the other side, with much force, that if this legal fiction were necessary at all, it ought to have been used for the opening of Parliament two months ago: that hitherto the time of Parliament had been wasted,-its deliberations unauthorised, irregular, and fruitless But this fiction was also an assumption of royal authority The Houses had already agreed to allot one portion of the preiogatives to the queen, and another to the regent, and now they were about to take another portion themselves. but, after all, the fictitious use of the kıng's name would be illegal By the 33rd Henry VIII., it was declared that a commission for giving the royal assent to a bill must be by letters patent under the great seal, and signed by the king's own hand The great seal alone would not, therefore, make the commission legal, and the Act for the Duke of Norfolk's attainder had been declared void by Parliament 1, because the commission for giving the royal assent to it had wanted the king's sign-manual, his name having been affixed by means of a stamp. The course proposed by ministers, however, was approved by both Houses

The royal dukes decline to be in the commission,

According to invariable custom, the names of all the royal dukes, having seats in the House of Lords, had been inserted in the proposed commission; but the Duke of York desired that his own name and that of the Prince of Wales might be omitted, as he "deemed the measure proposed, as well as every other which had been taken respecting the same subject, as unconstitutional and illegal". The Duke of Climberland also desired the omission of his name, and that of the Duke of Gloucester.

On the 3rd February, Parliament was at length opened Opening of by commission | Earl Bathurst, one of the commissioners Parlisment who sat as speaker, in the absence of the Chancellor. stated that the illness of his Majesty had made it necessary that a commission in his name should pass the Great Seal, and when the commission had been read, he delivered a speech to both Houses, in pursuance of the authority given by that commission, declaring the causes of summons, and calling attention to the necessity of making provision for the care of the king's peison, and the administration of the royal authority

Meanwhile, it became necessary that the usual com- Commismission should issue for holding the assizes Although holding the the sign-manual could not then be obtained, the urgency assizes of the occasion was so great that Lord Thurlow, the chancellor, affixed the great seal to a commission for that purpose, by vutue of which the judges went their carcuate 2

After all these delays, Mr Pitt now brought the Regency Regency Bill into the House of Commons 8 The provi- Bill brought in. sions which attracted most observation were the nomination of the queen's council, the restriction upon the creation of peers, the power of the privy council to pronounce his Majesty's restoration to health and capacity, and a clause by which the regent's authority would cease if he married a Roman Catholic But, as the measure was not destined to pass, the lengthened debates to which it gave rise, need not be pursued any further The bill had been sent to the Lords, - its clauses were being discussed in committee, - and politicians, in expectation of its early passing, were busily filling up the places in the prince regent's first administration, - when on the 19th February, the Lord Chancellor announced that his Majesty was convalescent; and further proceedings were arrested. The king's recovery was now rapid on the 25th, he was pronounced free from complaint, and on the 27th, further bulletins were discontinued by his Majesty's own command On the 10th March another commission was issued, authorising "the commissioners, who were appointed by former letters patent to hold this Parliament, to open and declare certain further causes for holding the same,"1 thus recognising the validity of the previous commission, to which the great seal had been affixed in his name 2 He thanked Parliament for its attachment to his person, and its concern for the honour of the Crown, and the security of his dominions Loyal addresses were agreed to by both Houses, nem con, as well as a message of congratulation to the queen.

&lt;sup>5</sup> 5th February, 1789, see a copy of the Regency Bill as passed by the Commons, Parl Hist, xxvii See Form of Commission, Loids Journ, xxxviii 344 <sup>2</sup> Speech of Lord Liverpool, Jan 5th, 1811 Hansard's Deb, 1st Ser., 1258. xviii. 789.

The king's sudden recovery

The king goes to St Paul's

The 23rd April was appointed as a day of public thanksgrying, when the king and loval family, attended by both Houses of Parliament, the great officers of state, and foreign ambassadors, went in procession to St Paul's. It was a solemn and affecting spectacle a national demonstration of loyalty, and plous gratitude

Fortunata delay in passing the Regency

Thus ended a most painful episode in the history of this reign Had no delays been interposed in the progress of the Regency Bill, the king, on his recovery, would have found himself stripped of his royal authority He was spared this sorrow, partly by the numerous preliminaries which the ministers had deemed necessary. and partly by the conduct of the Opposition, who though

&lt;sup>1</sup> Commons' Journ., xliv 159 <sup>9</sup> While the proceedings upon the Regency Bill were pending, after his Majesty's recovery several other bills were untroduced

into both Houses of Pailiament, most interested in the speedy passing of the bill, had contributed to its protracted consideration By asserting the prince's right, they had provoked the ministers to maintain the authority of Parliament, as a preliminary Twice they had caused the physicians to legislation to be examined, and they discussed the bill in all its stages, in full confidence that his Majesty's recovery was hopeless

Many of the preliminaries, indeed, would seem to Comments have been superfluous but the unprecedented curproceedcumstances with which ministers had to deal .- the entire want of confidence between them and the Prince of Wales, -the uncertainty of the king's recovery,-the conduct of the Opposition, and their relations to the Prince,-together with several constitutional considerations of the utmost difficulty, contributed to the embarrassment of their position

If it was necessary to authorise the opening of Parliament by a commission under the great seal, this course ought to have been at first adopted, for the law of Parliament does not recognise the distinction then raised, between legislative and any other proceedings. No business whatever can be commenced until the causes of summons have been declared by the Crown 1 The king having been unable to exercise this function, Parliament had proceeded with its deliberations for upwards of two months, without the accustomed speech from the throne And if any doubt existed as to the validity of these proceedings, it is difficult to understand how they could be removed by the commission. As the king's authority could not in fact be exercised, and as the great seal, intended to represent it, was affixed by direction of the two Houses, why was the fiction needed? The only real authority was that of Pailiament, which might have been boldly and openly exercised, during the incapacity of the king

&lt;sup>1</sup> Even the election of a speaker until the pleasure of the Crown has and the swearing of members in a been signified.

The simplest and most direct course would, undoubtedly, have been for both Houses to agree upon an address to the Prince of Wales, praying him to exercise the royal authority, subject to conditions stated in the address itself, and on his acceptance of the trust. to proceed to give legal effect to these conditions by a bill,-to which the royal assent would be signified by the regent, on behalf of the Crown Either in earlier or in later times, such a course would probably have been followed, but at that period, above all others, lawyers delighted in fiction, and Westminster Hall was peopled with legal "phantoms" of their creation 1

Precedent of the Revolution of 1888

In proposing to proceed by address, the Opposition rehed upon the precedent of the Revolution of 1688 On the other side it was contended, and particularly by Sir John Scott, the Solicitor-General, - by whose advice the Government were mainly guided, - that after the throne had been declared vacant, Parliament soluted the Prince of Orange to assume the 10yal powers; but here the rights of the lawful sovereign could not be passed by, and superseded 2 His name must be used in all the proceedings his great seal affixed by the chancellor of his appointment, to every commission, and his authority recognised and represented, though his personal directions and capacity were

See Chapter on Law and Administration of Justice Lord John the "absurd phantom of a royal Russell says, "All reasonable re-strictions might have been imposed by Act of Parliament, with the assent given by the Houses of Parhament to their own act, by a fiction of then own creation"

royal assent given by the regent, a Paul Hist, xxvii. 825, Twiss's acting on behalf of the Crown."— Lufe of Eldon, 192 wanting It is obvious, however, that whatever empty forms were observed, the royal authority was, of necessity, superseded. As the throne was not vacant. no stanger was sought to fill it; but all parties concurred in calling upon the heir apparent to exercise his father's royal authority The two occasions differed in regard to the persons whom Parliament, in times of nearly equal emergency, proposed to invest with the supreme power but why a simple and direct course of proceeding was not as appropriate in the one case as in the other, we need the subtlety and formalism of the old school of lawyers to perceive.

As regards the conduct of political parties, it can Conduct of hardly be questioned that, on the one hand, Mr. Fox position and his party incautiously took up an indefensible position, while, on the other, Mr Pitt was unduly tenacious in asserting the authority of Parliament. which the prince had not authorised any one to question. -and which his brother, the Duke of York, had admitted. Yet the conduct of both is easily explained by the cucumstances of their respective parties. The prince had identified himself with Mr Fox and the Whigs, and it was well known to Mr Pitt, and offensively announced by his opponents, that the passing of the Regency Act would be the signal for his own dismissal To assert the prince's rights, and resist all restrictions upon his authority, was the natural course for his friends to adopt, while to maintain the prerogatives of the Crown,-to respect the feelings and dignity of the queen, and at the same time to yindicate the paramount authority of Pailiament, - was the becoming policy of the king's minister Mr Pitt's view, being favourable to popular rights, was supnorted by the people. Mr Fox, on the other hand, commutted hunself to the assertion of prerogative, and in-VOT. T vershed against the discretionary powers of Parliament. Well might Mi Prit exultinely exclaim, "I'll unwhig the centleman for the rest of his life "1 The proceedings on the regency confirmed the confidence of the king in Mr Pitt, and his distrust of Mr Fox and his adherents; and the popular minister had a long career of power before him

Proceedings in the Parliament of Ireland

While these proceedings were pending, the Parliament of Ireland, adopting the views of Mr. Fox, presented an address to the Prince of Wales, praying him to take upon himself "the government of this realm, during the continuance of his Majesty's present undisposition, and no longer, and under the style and title of Prince Regent of Ireland, in the name and on behalf of his Majesty, to exercise and administer, according to the laws and constitution of this kingdom, all regal powers, jurisdictions and preiogatives to the Crown and Govenument thereof belonging " The lord heutenant, the Marquess of Buckingham, having refused to transmit this address, the Parliament caused it to be conveyed directly to his Royal Highness, by some of their own members.2

To this address the prince returned an answer, in which, after thanking the Parliament of Ireland for their loyalty and affection, he stated that he trusted the king would soon be able to resume the personal exercise of the royal authority, which would render unnecessary any finther answer, except a repetition of his thanks ?

Adolphus's Hist, iv 326, n, and well-exercised discretion " Moore's Life of Sheridan, 11 38 Lord Grey, speaking in 1810 of the precedent of 1788, was of opinion, "now that the differences which then subsisted me no more, that all the prelummary steps taken . were wise and pindent, and conformable to the dictates of a sound vvin, 183, Hansard's Debates, 1st Ser , xviii 10 <sup>2</sup> Debates of the Parhament of Inoland , Paul Reguster of Inc-land, ix 119, Londs Journ (Incland), vol vs. 240, Com Journ (Lieland), vol xm 7.

S Hansard's Debates, 1st Ser,

Soon after his recovery, the king said to Loid Thui- Wise following to the low, "what has happened may happen again for king God's sake make some permanent and immediate provision for such a regency as may prevent the country from being involved in disputes and difficulties similar to those just over " Loid Thurlow and Mi Pitt agreed as to the expediency of such a measure, but differed as to the mode in which it should be framed. The former was soon afterwards out of office, and the latter thought no more about the matter 1 It is indeed singular that the king's wise for esight should have been entirely neglected, and that on three subsequent occasions, embarrassments ausing from the same cause, should have been experienced

In February, 1801, the king was again seized with The king's an illness of the same melancholy character, as that by 1801. which he had previously been afflicted 2 If not caused, it was at least aggravated by the excitement of an impending change of ministry8, in consequence of his difference of opinion with Mr Pitt on the Roman Catholic question 4

This illness, though not involving constitutional dif- Munisterial ficulties so important as those of 1788, occurred at a moment of no small political embarrassment Mr Pitt had tendered his resignation, and was holding office only until the appointment of his successor Mr Speaker

Lord Malmesbury's Diagr. iv 23 <sup>2</sup> Lord Malmesbury's Dray, Feb 17th, 1801 "King got a bad cold, takes James's powder; God forbid he should be ill!" Feb 19th "This the first symptom of the king's serious illness" Malm Coi, n 11, 13 Feb 22nd "Kmg much woise, Dr. J Willis attended him all last night, and says he fover, as bad as the worst period Laborty when he saw him in 1788 "Bid. 16. Evid of Dr Reynolds, 1810 Hans,

Deb , xvn1 134 He had been chilled by remaining very long in church on the Fast Day, Friday, Feb 18, and on his return home was seized with cramps -Lord Malmes Diany, 1V  Addington had received the king's commands to form an administration, and had, consequently, resigned the chain of the House of Commons. The armangements for a new ministry were in progress, when they were interrupted by the king's indisposition. But, believing it to be nothing more than a severe cold, Mr. Addington did not think fit to wait for his formal appointment, and vacated his seat, on the 19th February, by accepting the Chilerin Hundreds, in order to expedite his return to his place in Parhament. In the mean time Mr. Pitt, who had resigned office, not only continued to discharge the customary official duties of Chancellor of the Exchequet; but on the 18th February, brought forward the annual budget, which included a loan of 25,500,0001, and new taxes to the amount of 1.750.0004.

Mr. Addington had fully expected that his formal appointment as First Lord of the Treasury and Chancellor of the Exchequer would have been completed before his re-election, but this was prevented by the king's illness, and as his election could not legally be postponed, he took his seat again on the 27th, not as a minister of the Crown, but as a private member

On the 22nd the king's condition was as bad as at the worst period of his attack in 1788 'Towards the evening of the following day he came to himself, and indicated the causes of disturbance which were pressing on his mind, by exclaiming "I am better now, but I will issuan true to the Chuich," and afterwards, "the king's mind, whenever he came to himself, reverted at conce to the cause of his disquiestide." At the beginning of March his fever increased again, and for a time his life

I Lord Malmesb Distry, xrv 28 of the chair Mr Abbol's Distry, Xrv 28 of the chair Mr Abbol's Distry, Xrv 1972.

Life of Lord Submouth, 1 365, n Life of Lord Malmesb Distry, vi 16 the third bench, on the right hand block, on the right hand life of Lord, 20. I lord, 28.

was despaned of but about the 5th, a favourable turn took place, and though not allowed to engage in any business, he was from this time gradually recovering 2 On the 10th, he wrote a letter approving of a minute of the cabinet, and on the 11th he saw Mr. Addington and the Chancellor when he was pronounced, -- somewhat prematurely, -to be quite well 8

On the 24th February, the bill for repealing the absurd Brown Bread Act of the previous session was awaiting the loval assent, and it was thought very desirable that no delay should occur Mr Addington declined presenting the commission for his Majesty's signature, but the Chancellor, Lord Loughborough, waited upon the king, who signed the commission, saving it was a very good bill 4

Meanwhile, who was minister - Mr Pitt or Mr Addington? or neither? Both were in communication with the Prince of Wales on the probable necessity of a regency both were in official communication with the king himself 5 The embarrassment of such a position was reheved by the forbearance of all parties in both Houses of Parliament, and at length, on the 14th March, the king was sufficiently recovered to receive the seals from Mr Pitt, and to place them in the hands of Mi Addington. This acceptance of office, however, again vacated his seat, which lie was unable to resume as a minister of the Crown, until the 23rd March The king was still for some time obliged to abstain from unnecessary exer-On the 15th April, he transferred the great seal from Lord Loughborough to Lord Eldon, but though several other things were required to be done, the

Lord Sidmouth's Lafe, 1 350

Lord Malmesh Diary, 1v 27.

<sup>4</sup> Life of Lord Sidmouth, 1 908, Loid Malmesbury's Diary, 1v 17, 18
5 Life of Loid Sidmouth, 1 348, <sup>2</sup> Ibid, 80—38, et seq <sup>3</sup> Lord Malmesbury's Con, 1v 44, 350 , Malmesh, Diary, rv 25, &c

ministers were unanimous that he should only perform this single act on that day '

But even after the king had transacted business, and his recovery had been formally announced, his health continued to cause great anxiety to his family and munisters Apprehensions were entertained lest "his intellectual faculties should be impaired so much as never to recover their former tone." 2 "Writing in August, 1801, Mr T Grenville says "The king has seen the chancellor for two hours, and the immeters give out that the king will bold a coursel in a day or two at furthest." 3

On this occasion his Majesty's illness, however alarming, passed over without any serious hindrance to public business. It occurred while Pathament was sitting, and at a time when the personal exercise of the royal authority was not urgently required, except for the purposes already noticed. The constitutional questions, therefore, which had been so fully argued in 1788,—though gravely considered by those more immediately concerned,—did not come again under discussion. It must be admitted that the king's speedy recovery affords some justification of the dilatory proceedings adopted legarding the regency, in 1788. Too prompt a measure for supplying the defect of the royal authority, would, on the king's recovery, have been able embarrassing to

The king's illness in 1804

In 1804 the king was once more stricken with the same grievous malady. In January he was attacked with his Majesty himself, the ministers, and Parliament

Lafe of Lord Sidmouth, 1 401
 Lord Malmesbury's Distry, 20th March, Conrespondence, 1v 61
 Court and Cabinets of Geo III, in 167

<sup>4</sup> It was suggested that both T is parties, who had opposed each other so violently in 1788 upon the question of a regency, should now make 199.

mutual concessions, and, if possible, avoid the discussion of them conflicting opinions. In this view, it seems, Loid Spaces, the Duke of Porthaud, Mr. Grenville, and Mr. T. Pelham concurred, but Mr. Pitt appears not to have entirely acquised in it—Loid Malines, Civ., iv. 19.

theumanc gout, and about the 12th February, his mind became affected. He gradually recovered towards the end of the month?, yet his malady continued, with more or less severity, so as to make it requisite to spare him all unnecessary exeition of mind, till the 23rd April, when he presided at a council. He remained under medical care and control until the 10th June. For a time his hie was in danger, but his mind was never so completely whenated as it had been in 1788 and 1801.

On the 26th February the archbishop offered a thanksgiving for the happy prospect of his Majesty's speedy recovery, and on the same day, the physicians issued a bulletin, announcing that any rapid amendment was not to be expected.

Meanwhile, the ordinary business of the session was proceeded with On the 27th February, the king's illness was adverted to in the House of Commons but immisters were of opinion that a formal communication to the House upon the subject was not required, and could secure no good object. Mr. Addington stated that there was not, at that time, any necessary suspension of such royal functions as it might be needful for his Majesty to discharge That very day the cabinet had examined the king's physicians, who were unanimously of opinion that his Majesty was perfectly community of opinion that his Majesty was perfectly com-

Lord Mahnesbuy says, although these was a council hald about the 24th January at the queen's house, yet before the end of that month it was no longen to be concaled that the long had a setum of his old illness,"—Co w 292 But appears from Lord Sidnouth's life, that the kung's resson was not affected until about the 12th of Fohuny Lord Sidnouth's Life n, 240, ct seq. 12th Control 12th of Tenhuny Lord Sidnouth's Life n, 24th ct seq. 12th Control 12th of Tenhuny Lord Sidnouth's Life n, 24th ct seq. 12th Control 12th of Tenhuny Lord Sidnouth's Life n, 24th ct seq. 12th ct seq. 12th Control 12th of Tenhuny Lord Sidnouth's Life n, 24th ct seq. 12th Control 12th Co

&lt;sup>2</sup> Lord Sidmouth's Lafe, 1: 249, et seq <sup>5</sup> Evidence of Dr Hoberden, 1810. He had otherwise been indeposed for a month proviously, with symptoms of his old midady bullensbury's Cor, 1v 202, Fox's Mem, 1v 24, 36, 74 Fox's Mem, 1v 24, 36, 74 Fox's Diarry, 1v 24, 36, 75 Fox's Dia

Lord Sidmonth's Life, ii 250
 Hansaid's Deb, 1st Sei, 1 207, 526, 530

petent to understand the effect of an instrument to which his sign-manual was required, but that it would be imprudent for him to engage in long argument, or fatiguing discussion. The deheate and responsible position of the ministers, however, was admitted. The king having already been ill for a fortinght, — how much longer might they exercise all the executive powers of the state, without calling in aid the authority of Parliament? At present they accepted the responsibility of declaring that the interference of Parliament was unnecessary. On the 1st March, similar assurances were given by Lord Hawkesbury in the House of Lords the Lord Chancellor also declared that, at that moment, there was no suspension of the 1 oval functions.

On the 2nd March, the matter was again brought forward by Mr Grev, but elected no further explanation 2 On the 5th, the Lord Chancellor stated that he had had interviews, on that and the previous day, with the kine, who gave his consent to the Duke of York's Estate Bill, so far as his own interest was concerned, and on the same day the physicians were of opinion "that his Majesty was fully competent to transact business with his Parliament, by commission and message" 8 On the 9th, Mr Grev adverted to the fact that fifteen bills had just received the royal assent. - a circumstance which he regarded with "incessness and apprehension "4 Among these bills were the annual Mutiny Acts, the passing of which, in the midst of war, could not have been safely postponed On this day also, the Lord Chancellor assured the House of Lords, "that not satisfied with the reports and assurances of the medical attendants, he had thought it right to obtain a personal interview with the sovereign, and that at that interview due discussion had taken place as to the bills offered for the royal assent, which had thereupon been fully expressed." In reference to this interview, Lord Eldon states in his Anecdote Book, that the king had noticed that he was stated in the commission to have fully considered the bills to which his assent was to be signified; and that to be correct, he onght to have the bills to peruse and consider His Majesty added, that in the early part of his reign he had always had the bills themselves, until Lord Thurlow ceased to bring them, saying . "it was nonsense his giving himself the trouble to read them." If there was somewhat of the perverse acuteness of insanity in these remarks, there was vet sufficient self-possession in the loval mind, to satisfy Lord Eldon that he was justified in taking the sign-manual 1 On the 23rd March. seventeen other bills received the royal assent, and on the 26th March, a message from the king, signed by himself, was brought to the House of Commons by Mr Addington but no observation was made concerning his Majesty's health There is little doubt that his Majesty, though for some months afterwards strange and disordered in his family circle, was not incapacitated from attending to necessary business with his ministers 2 The Opposition, however, and particularly the Carlton House party, were disposed to make the most of the king's illness, and were confidently expecting a regency 8

&lt;sup>1</sup> Twiss's Life of Eldon, 1 421 <sup>3</sup> Hansard's Deb., 1st Ser., 1 663. <sup>3</sup> Twiss's Life of Eldon, 1 422 <sup>4</sup> Hansard's Deb., 1st Ser., 1 823.

Before his Majesty had been restored to his accus- Change of 315.

Pince of Wales had asserted that the king's illness must last for several months, said, "Thy wish was fa-then, Harry, to that thought "-Lord Malmesbury's Cor, 1v 298, 313,

&lt;sup>1</sup> Hansand's Debates, 1st Ser, 1 162, Twiss's Life of Eldon, 1 419 <sup>2</sup> Twiss's Life of Eldon, 1 422, Lond Malmesbuy's Coi, 1v 317, 325, 327, 344, Lord Sidmouth's Life, 11 248, et seg

<sup>3</sup> Mr. Pitt, on being told that the ministry before the king's recovery

tomed health, the fall of his favourite minister, Mr Addington, was impending, and the king was engaged in negotiations with the chancellor and Mr Pitt, for the formation of another administration 1 To confer with his Majesty upon questions so formal as his assent to the Mutiny Bills, had been a matter of delicacy but to discuss with him so important a measure as the reconstruction of a ministry, in a time of war and public danger, was indeed embarrassing Mr Pitt's correspondence discloses his misgivings as to the state of the king's mind.2 But on the 7th May, he was with him for three hours, and was amazed at the cool and collected manner in which his Maiesty had carried on the conversation 8 It was probably from this interview that Lord Eldon relates Mr. Pitt to have come out "not only satisfied, but much surprised with the king's ability He said he had never so baffled him in any conversation he had had with him in his life "4 Yet, on the 9th May, after another interview. Mi Pitt wrote to the chancellor. "I do not think there was anything positively wrong, but there was a hurry of spirits and an excessive love of talking" . . . "There is certainly nothing in what I have observed that would, in the smallest degree, justify postponing any other steps that are in progress towards arrangement" Nor did these continued misgivings prevent the ministerial arrangements from being coinpleted, some time before the king was entirely relieved from the care of his medical attendants

&lt;sup>1</sup> The chancellor's conduct, on los, vn 166, Law Review, Nos this occasion, in negotiating for 11, and x1 Mr Pitt's letain to office, unknown to Mr Addington and his
2_ Letters to Lord Eidon, April known to Mr Addington and his 2_ May 8, Loid Campbell's Lives, olleagues, has exposed him to vi 180, 173 the severest animaliversions -Lord Lord Malmesh Cor, 1v. 306 Campbell's Laves of the Chancel-

Twiss's Lafe, i, 449,

Lord Chancellor, in allowing the royal functions to be the conduct exercised during this period, were several years after-of minuswards severely impugned In 1811, Lord Grey had not forgotten the suspicions he had expressed in 1804, and in examining the king's physicians, he elicited, especially from Dr Heberden, several circumstances, previously unknown, relative to the king's former ill-On the 28th January, fortified by this evidence, he arraigned the Lord Chancellor of conduct "little short of high treason," - of "treason against the constitution and the country" He particularly relied upon the fact, that on the 9th March, 1804, the Chancellon had affixed the great seal to a commission for giving the 10yal assent to fifteen bills, and accused the ministers of that day of "having culpably made use of the king's name without the king's sanction, and criminally exercised the loval functions, when the sovereign was under a moral incapacity to authorise such a proceeding"1 Lord Sidmouth and Lord Eldon, the ministers whose conduct was mainly impugned, defended themselves from these imputations, and expressed their astonishment at Dr. Heberden's evidence, which, they said, was at variance with the opinions of all the physicians, -including Dr Heberden himself, -- expressed in 1804, while in attendance upon the king They stated that his new version of his Majesty's former illness had surprised the queen, not less than the ministers. And it is quite clear, from other evidence, that Dr Heberden's account of the duration and continuous character of the king's malady,

The conduct of the Government, and especially of the Imputawas maccurate 2 Lord Eldon, oddly enough, affirmed, 1 Hansard's Debates, 1st Sca, Lord Sidmouth's Lufe, and sugn a, p 168, <sup>2</sup> Lgrd Malmesbury's Dianes and that on the 9th of March, the king understood the duty which the Chancellor had to perform, better than he did himself This he believed he could prove A motion was made by Loid King, for omitting Lord Eldon's name from the Queen's Council of Regency, and its rejection was the cause of a potest, signed by mee peers,—including Lords Grey, Holland, Lauderdale, and Easkine,—in which they affilmed his unitiness for that office, on the ground that he had improperly used the king's name and authority, during his mcapacity in 1804. In the House of Commons Mr Whithread, made a similar charge against his lordship, and the Lord Chancellor complianed,—not without reason,—that he had been hardly dealt with by his enemies, and feebly defended by his friends.

Necessity of a Regency Act canyussed.

In 1804 the propriety of passing a regency bill, to provide for any future illness of the king, was once more the subject of grave consideration among the statesmen of the period *, but,—as in 1780, so now again,—no sooner did the king recover, than all further care appears to have been cast aside. Six years later this want of foresight again led to serious embarrossment.

King's illness in 1810. The king's last mental disorder commenced in the autium of 1810. His kingly career was to close for ever. Benefit of reason and nearly blind, the poor old king,—who had ruled for fifty years with so high a hand, and so strong a will,—was now tended by physicians, and controlled by keepers. His constitutional infirmity, aggravated by political anxieties and domestic distresses, had over come him; and he was too far advanced in years, to rally again. It was a mouniful spectacle. Like King Lear, he was > "A poor old man. "As full of guef as age wretched in both"

&lt;sup>1</sup> Hansard's Debates, 1st Ser, 37, Twiss's Life of Eldon, ii 151—xvii 1631—1687

<sup>2</sup> Hansard's Debates, 1st Ser, <sup>3</sup> Lord Malmesbury's Coi, iv. xix 87, Lord Sidmouth's Life, iii. 315.

But as physicians will dispute at the bedside of the dving patient, - so the hopes and fears of fival parties. and the rude collisions of political strife, were aroused into activity by the sufferings of the king. The contentions of 1788 were revived, though the leaders of that age had passed away

Parliament stood prorogued to the 1st November, Meeting of Parlia and a proclamation had appeared in the "Gazette," ment declaring the king's pleasure that it should be further prorogued by commission to the 29th But before this commission could be signed, his Majesty became so ill that the Lord Chancellor, unable to obtain his signature, did not feel justified in affixing the great scal; and in this view of his duty, statesmen of all parties concurred 1 Following the precedent of 1788, both Houses met on the 1st November, and on being informed of the cucumstances under which they were assembled2, adjourned until the 15th, - fourteen days being the shortest period within which Parliament may, by law, be summoned for despatch of business Cucular letters were duected to be sent, summoning the members of both Houses to attend on that day Strong hopes had been entertained by the physicians, hberty to have passed this commission, for these had been an order which the House had met, before made at a council, at which the hot took the chain—Hansaid's De-Large pessed to council, at which the hot took the chain—Homsoid's De-lang pressed to pincagen Balha- botte, list Sen xymi 3 On taking ment from the let to the 20th No-vember, and to prepage a commiss—that he had issued a new writ son for this purpose "—Lares of the Chancellos, ym. 242

<sup>2</sup> Lord Campbell, however, says, <sup>2</sup> In the Commons, the Speaker "It would have been but a small first took his seat at the table, and

of his Majesty's speedy recovery, and in the interval they were confirmed Both Houses, therefore, on these representations being made, again adjourned for a fortnight Before their next meeting the king's physicians were examined by the privy council, and as they were still confident of his Majesty's recovery, a further adjournment for a fortnight was agreed upon,—though not without objections to so long an interruption of business, and a division in both Houses

Dec 13

Nov 29

No longer delay could now be suggested, and at the next meeting, a committee of twenty-one members was appointed in both Houses, for the examination of the king's physicians. They still entertained hopes of his Majesty's ultimate recovery, in spite of his age and blindness; but could not form any opinion as to the probable duration of his illness

Precedent of 1788 Continuing to follow generally the precedent of 1783, ministers piposed, on the 20th December, in a committee on the state of the nation, three rosolutions,—affirming the king's incapacity,—the right and duty of the two Houses to provide for this exigency,—and the necessity of determining by what means the royal assent should be signified to a bill for that purpose. Again the question of proceeding by bill, or by address was argued. The proceedings of 1788 were exposed to a searching criticism, and all the precedents of constitutional history, presenting any analogy to the present or cumstances, learnedly investigated. The expedients which had delighted Lord Eldon in his early career, found httle favour with the more philosophic lawyers of a later school. Sir S. Rounlly regarded them "in no other light but as a fraudulent trick," and asked what would be said of "a set of men joining together, and making a contact for another in a state of insentity, and making a contact for another in a state of insentity.

Discussions upon that precedent

and employing a person as his solicitor, to affix his seal or his signature to such a deed?"

Considering the recency and complete application of the precedent of 1788, it is not surprising that both munsters and Parliament should have agreed to follow it, instead of adopting a more simple course; but to most minds of the present age, the arguments of those who contended for an address, and against the "Phantom," will appear the more conclusive The loyal authority was wanting, and could be supplied by Parliament alone So far all were agreed, but those who argued for proceeding by means of a bill, accepted a notoriously fictitious use of the king's name, as an equivalent for his real authority, while those who supported a direct address, desired that Parliament,- openly recognising the king's mability to exercise his royal authority, -- should from the necessity of the case, proceed to act without it Of all the speeches against proceeding by way of bill, the most learned, able, and argumentative, was that of Mr Francis Horner 1 Comparing the proceedings of 1788, with those of the Revolution of 1688, he said "It is impossible not to contrast the virtuous forbearance of all parties at the Revolution, in concurring to provide for the public interests, with the struggle that was made for power in the other instance, and, above all, to contrast the studied delays by which power was then so factiously retained, with the despatch with which our ancestors finished, in one short month, their task of establishing at once the succession to the Crown, reducing its pierogatives within limitations by law, and founding the whole structure of our cavil and religious liberties"2

&lt;sup>1</sup> Hansard's Debates, 1st Ser, <sup>2</sup> Hansard's Debates, 1st Ser, xviii 209.

Political causes of delay But independently of precedents and legal forms, the mmsters expecting, the their predecessors in 1788, to be dismissed by the regent, were not disposed to simplify the preliminary proceedings, and accelerate their own full, while the Opposition, impatient for office, objected to elaborate preliminaries,—as much, perhaps, for the delays which they occasioned, as for their hollow subtlets and uselessness

Resolutions agreed to Dec 22. subtlety and uselessness The resolutions were agreed to, and communicated to the Lords, at a conference There an amendment was moved by Lord Holland, to the third resolution, by which an address to the Prince of Wales was proposed to be substituted for the proceeding by bill, inviting the prince to fake upon himself the exercise of the powers and authorities of the Crown, but to abstain from the exercise of such powers as the immediate exigencies of the state shall not call into action, until Parliament had pa-sed a bill for the future care of his Majesty's person, and securing the resumption of his authority 1 Dukes of York and Sussex spoke in favour of this amendment, and all the seven dukes of the blood 10yal voted for it 2 but the resolution was carried by . a majority of twenty-six The royal dukes also signed protests against the rejection of the amendment, and against the third resolution 3 The chancellor differed widely from the 10yal dukes, declaring that an adchess from the two Houses to the Prince of Wales. praying him to exercise the royal prerogatives during the king's life, would be treasonable 4

The next step was to propose, in committee on the state of the nation, resolutions to the effect that the Prince

&lt;sup>1</sup> Hansard, 1st Ser, xviii 418
<sup>2</sup> York, Clarence, Kent, Cumberland, Sussex, Cambridge, and Glou
<sup>3</sup> Hansard's Debates, 1st Ser, xviii 471

<sup>4</sup> Ibid, 459, 718.

of Wales should be empowered, as regent of the kingdom, to exercise the royal authority, in the name and on behalf of his Majesty, subject to such limitations as shall be provided that for a hinted time the regent should not be able to grant any peerage, except for some singular naval or military achievement, nor grant any office in reversion one any office otherwise than during pleasure, except such offices as are required by law to be granted for life or during good behaviour that his Majesty's private property, not already vested in trustees, should be vested in trustees for the benefit of his Majesty that the care of the king's person should be committed to the queen, who for a limited time, should have power to appoint and remove members of the loyal household, and that her Majesty should have a council, with power to examine the king's physicians, upon oath, from time to time It was explained, at the same time, that twelve months would be the period to which the proposed limitations upon the regent's authority would extend

Four of these resolutions were agreed to in the Commons by small majorities 2, and not without strong arguments against any restrictions upon the authority of the regent The fifth was amended on a motion of Earl Gower, in such a manner as to leave the queen merely "such direction of the household as may be suitable for the care of his Majesty's person, and the maintenance of the 10val dignity" 8

The resolutions were communicated to the Lords at a conference There, on the motion of the Marquess of Lansdowne, the first resolution was amended by the omission of the last words, viz, "subject to such limitations and restrictions as shall be provided" "— thus appointing the regent generally, without restrictions upon his authority. But as the two next resolutions, imposing limitations upon the giant of peciages, places and pensions, were immediately afterwards agreed to, the words were restrictions proposed by the Commons were ultimately agreed to without alteration.

&lt;sup>1</sup> This exception was subsequently omitted against the Gorament, and the <sup>1</sup> The first isolution was caused by a majority of 24, the second by a majority of 3 a majority of 3

Resolutions laid before the prince The next step, as in 1789, was to lay these resolutions before the Pinnee of Wales, and to beg him to accept the trust, subject to the proposed restrictions, and in reply, he signified his acceptance. The queen was also attended in negard to the direction of the royal household.

Again, it was resolved by both Houses that a commission should issue under the great seal for opening

Commission for opening Parliament

Pathament, but wanned by the precedent of 1788, ministers had taken the precaution of consulting the 10yal dukes, and by their desire omitted their names from the commission. On the 15th January, Pathament was opened by virtue of this commission, and the Regency Bill was brought in by the Chancellor of the Excheque, on the same day. The bill, though still the subject of much discussion, was rapidly passed through both Houses, with some few amendments Resolutions were agreed to by both Houses, authorising the issue of letters patient under the great seal, for giving the royal assent by commission, and on the 5th

February, the bill received the royal assent by virtue

The Regency Bill passed

of that commission

Formatite

It is worthy of note, that both this commission and that for opening Parhament, deviated materially from the usual form of such commissions, and instead of being issued by the advice of the privy council it was expressed thus "by the king himself by and with the advice of the Lords spiritual and temporal, and Commons in Parliament assembled "

By a majority of 3

During these proceedings, an unexpected difficulty town of had ansen Certain sums of money had already been public granted, and appropriated by Parhament, for the service of the army and navy, but in consequence of the king's incapacity, the usual warrants under the privy seal, could not be prepared, directing assues to be made from the Exchequer for such services The Lord Keener of the prove seal was willing to take upon hunself the responsibility of affixing the seal to such a warrant ', although by the terms of his oath he was restrained from using it "without the king's special command "2 but the deputy clerks of the Privy Seal held themselves precluded by their oaths of office, from preparing letters to pass the privy seal, until a warrant had been stoned by the kine himself, for that number The necessities of the public service were urgent, and the Treasury being unable to obtain the money according to the usual official routine, prepared two warrants addressed to the auditor of the Exchequer, duecting hum to draw one order on the Bank of England for 500,0001, on account of the army, and another to the same amount, for the navy The auditor, Lord Grenville, Difficulties doubting the authority of these warrants, desired that lassed by the law officers of the Crown should be consulted was their oninion that the Treasury warrants were not a sufficient authority for the auditor, who accordingly refused to issue the money, and although the Treasury <sup>1</sup> Speech of Mi Penceral 4th <sup>g</sup> Speech of Earl Spences, 5th Jan, and of Lond Westmouland, Jan, 1811.— Hausen d's Debates, 5th Jan, 1811.—Hausen d's Debates, 1st Ser, xviii 759, 798

1st Ser, xviii 759, 798

expressly assumed the entire responsibility of the issue, he persisted in his refusal

Resolution of both Houses directing the issue of money

It was now necessary to resort to Parliament to supply the defect of authority which had been discovered, and on the 4th January the Chancellor of the Exchequer moved a resolution in committee of the whole House, by which the auditor and officers of the Exchequer were "authorised and commanded" to pay obedience to Treasury warrants for the issue of such sums as had been appropriated for the services of the army and navy, as well as money assuable under a vote of credit for 3.000,000l To this resolution it was objected, that it involved a further assumption of the executive powers of the Crown, and was only rendered necessary by the unreasonable delays which ministers had interposed, in providing for the exercise of the royal authority but the immediate necessity of the occasion could not be demed, and the resolution was agreed to by both Houses. A protest, however, was entered in the Loids' journal, signed by twenty-one peers, including six royal dukes, which affirmed that the principle of the resolution would justify the assumption of all the executive powers of the Crown, during any suspension of the personal exercise of the loyal authority, and that this unconstitutional measure might have been avoided without miury to the public service, by an address to the Prince of Wales. 1

The Royal Sign Manual Bill, 1830 Happilythere has been no recurrence of circumstances smular to those of 1788 and 1811 but Parhament has since had occasion to provide for the exercise of the royal authority, under other contingencies From an early period in the regn of George IV, his Majesty's health had excited apprehensions <sup>3</sup> In 1826 his life was said not to be worth a month's purchase1, but it was not until within a few weeksof his death, that he suffered from any incapacity to exercise his royal functions In 1830. during the last illness of the king, his Majesty found it inconvenient and painful to subscribe with his own hand. the public instruments which required the sign manual. and accordingly, on the 24th of May, a message was sent to both Houses, desning that provision should be made for the temporary discharge of this duty 2 The message was acknowledged by suitable addresses, and a bill was passed rapidly through both Houses, enabling his Majesty to empower by warrant or commission, under his sign manual, one or more persons to affix, in his presence, and by his command, signified by word of mouth, the royal signature by means of a stamp In order to prevent the possibility of any abuse of this power, it was provided that the stamp should not be affixed to any instrument, unless a memorandum describing its object had been indorsed upon it, signed by the Lord Chancellor, the President of the Council, the Lord Privy Seal, the First Lord of the Treasury, and the Secretaries of State, or any three of them The seal was directed to be kept in the custody of one of these officers, and when used, was required to be attested by one or more of them

&lt;sup>1</sup> Hansaud's Debates, 1st Ser., George IV, 1 313, 336, 447, Ibid., vvih 801 n 67, 217 Su Wilham Knighton's <sup>2</sup> Duke of Buckingham's Court of Mem 88, &c.

The course thus adopted was not without precedent, Precedents Henry VIII had issued a patent, authorising the Arch- on which bishop of Canterbury, the Lord Chancellor, and other persons to apply a stamp, bearing the impress of the royal signature, to wairants for the payment of money out of the royal treasury, and had also issued several proclamations and other instruments, on which his sion manual had been impressed by means of a stamp His signature to the commission for signifying the royal assent to the bill for the attainder of the Duke of Notfolk had been given by means of a stamp, affixed, -not by his own hand, but by that of a clerk,and was on that account declared by Parliament to be myslid Edward VI had issued two proclamations, to which his signature was affixed by means of a stamp. Queen Mary had issued a proclamation, in the same form, calling for aid to suppress the insurrection of Sir Thomas Wyatt The same queen had issued a patent. in the fifth and sixth years of her reign, stating that in consequence of the great labour which she sustained in the government and defence of the kingdom, she was unable, without much danger and inconvenience, to sign the commissions, warrants, and other instruments with her own hand, empowering certain persons to affix a seal in her presence, and declaring that all instruments so sealed should be as valid and effectual in law, as if signed with the hand of the queen. It appears also that King William III, being on the point of death, and no longer able to sign his own name, affixed a stamp to a commission, in presence of the Lord Keeper and the clerks of the Parliament, by which the 10yal assent was signified to the Bill of Abjuration, and the Mult Duty Bill

&lt;sup>1</sup> Mr Plumer Ward to Duke of Buckingham, April 21, 1826 Court of George IV, n. 297, Ibid., 300, 301

But notwithstanding these precedents —which proved that in former times the kings of England had been accusiomed, by then own authority, to delegate to others the right of affixing their sign manual,—it was now laid down by ministers, and by all legal authorities, that such a right could not lawfully be conferred, except by the sanction of Parhament This sanction was readily given in this particular case, but not without wainings that as his Majesty's present indisposition was merely physical, the proceedings then adopted should not hereafter be drawn into a precedent, if the mind of any future king should become affected In such an event, the power of affixing the loyal sign manual to instruments, would invest the ministers of the day with all the authority of the Crown On more than one occasion, during the late reign, such a power might have been hable to abuse; and it would not again be conferred upon ministers, if there should be any doubt as to the mental capacity of the sovereign 1

When William IV succeeded to the throne, he was Question of nearly sixty-five years of age, and his heness presumptive a regency on the acwas a princess of eleven It was, therefore, necessary cession of to provide for a regency, but the ministers were of opinion that they might safely defer this measure, until after the assembling of a new Parliament. Even this buef delay was represented as hazardous It was said that if the king should die suddenly, the crown would devolve upon an infant princess, - subject, perhaps, to the claims of a posthumous child of his Majesty This 11sk, however, the ministers were prepared to en-The law did not recognise the incapacity of an infant king, and, in the event of a sudden demise of the Crown before a regent had been appointed, the infant sovereign would be able to give her assent to an act of Parhament, appointing a guardian for herself, and a regent for the kingdom Henry III, Richard II , and Henry VI had succeeded to the throne, without any previous parhamentary provision for a regency, H Gee IV and I Will IV c Hansand's Debates, New Sen

 Hume's Hust
 n n 138 148 1198 Hist
 1
 441

and after their accession, Parliament appointed persons to govern the kingdom during their minority

The Lord Chancellor said "On the accession of an mfant to the throne, the same course would be adopted as if the sovereign were of mature years, a declaration, similar to that which many of their lordships had witnessed a few days ago, would be made The infant would have the power of continuing or changing his ministers, and the same responsibility would exist as at present "1 And this doctrine of the law was thus explamed by Lord Eldon "If an infant sovereign were to be on the throne, whose head could not be seen over the integument which covered the head of his noble and learned friend on the woolsack, he would, by what the Scotch called a fiction of law, and by what the English called presumption, in favour of a royal infant, be supposed to have as much sense, knowledge, and experience, as if he had reached the years of threescore and ten "2

This abstract presumption of the law was not denied; but it was argued that to rely upon it in practice, would bring into contempt the preiogatives of the Crown, and might be fraught with dangers to the state An infant sovereign might indeed appoint her own guardian, and a regent of the kingdom; but she would scarcely be more competent to exercise the discrummating judgment of a sovereign, than was George III. when the royal assent was given, in his name, to the Regency Bill, by a phantom commission necessary act had struck a blow at royalty. it had shown how Parhament could make laws without a king it had exhibited the Crown as a name, a form, a mere fiction of authority, and to allow a princess of eleven to assent to another act of regency, would be Hansard's Debates, 2nd Ser., xxv, 738. 2 Ibid. 742

a dangerous repetition of that precedent. But there were other dangers which ought to be averted It was easy, before the demise of the Crown, to appoint a regent who might never be called upon to exercise his power; but to appoint,-possibly from amongst many claimants, - a regent who would at once assume all the authority of the Crown, might be difficult and embanassing Still greater would be the embanassment, if the light of succession should be rendered doubtful, by the prospective claims of an unborn child An attempt was made, in the Commons, to represent to the king the importance of making immediate provision for a regency, but the ministers successfully resisted it, and the question was reserved for the consideration of the new Parliament 1

Happily, these dieaded evils were not encountered; The Rand on the meeting of the new Pailiament, a well-con- 1880-1881 sidered Regency Bill was introduced. By this bill the Duchess of Kent was appointed sole regent, until her Majesty should attain the age of eighteen Departing from former precedents, it was not proposed that the regent should be controlled by a council It was said that a regent, for the maintenance of the royal autho-11ty, needed the free exercise of the prelogatives of the Crown, even more than a king himself Cases might, indeed, asise in which it would be necessary to control the ambition and influence of a regent, by such a council but here the regent could never succeed to the throne her interests were identified with those of the future sovereign, to whom she was united by the tenderest ties, and she could have no object but to uphold, in good faith, the authority of the infant queen Her Royal Highness would, therefore, be left to administer the government of the country, by means of the responsible ministers of the Chown, and to act upon their advice alone

1 Hansaid's Debates, 2nd Sei , xxv 771-828

Another question of great constitutional delicacy was also wisely dealt with No precedent was to be found, since the Norman Conquest, of any provision having been made for the exercise of the royal prerogatives, between the demise of the Crown, and the birth of a posthumous child The law upon this important question was not settled, but reasoning from the analogy of the law of real property, as well as according to the dictates of common sense, it was clear that an unborn child could not be seised of the Crown. There could be no abeyance or vacancy of the Crown The king never dies. The crown must, therefore, devolve at once upon the heir presumptive, and be resigned, if a child should be born, entitled to inherit it. If Parliament interposed, and appointed a regent to administer the government until the birth of a posthumous child, such a regent would not be governing in the name and on behalf of the sovereign, but would be a parhamentary sovereign, created for the occasion, under the title of regent And, in the meantime, if no child should be born, the heir presumptive would have been unlawfully deprived of her right to the throne Upon these sound principles the regency was now to be established. If the king should die during the minority of the Princess Victoria, she was to be proclaimed queen, subject to the nights of any issue of his Majesty, which might afterwards be born of his consort. The Duchess of Kent would at once assume the regency in the name of the Infant Queen, and on her behalf, and should a posthumous child be born, her Majesty Queen Adelaide would forthwith assume the regency, on behalf of her own child These principles were accepted by statesmen and lawyers of every party, and the Regency Bill, which had been prepared by the government of the Duke of Wellmeton, was adopted and passed by the government of Lord Grey 1 It was a wise provision for continuencies, which for tunately never arose When King William IV died, in 1837, after a short but eventful reign, her most gracious Maiesty had. less than a month before, completed her eighteenth year: and ascended the throne, surrounded by happy anourses, which have since been fully accomplished

On the accession of her Majesty, the King of Hanover Flist Rebecame herr presumptive to the throne, and as he of Queen would probably be resident abroad, it was thought Victoria necessary to provide that, in the event of her Majesty's decease, while her successor was out of the realm, the administration of the government should be carried on in his name by loids justices, until his arrival 2. But Second Rethe queen's marriage, in 1840, required provision to be gency Act, made for another contingency, which, though more probable, has, happily not ausen Following the precedent of 1831, Parhament now provided, that in the event of any child of her Majesty succeeding to the throne before the age of eighteen, Prince Albert, as the surviving parent, should be regent, without any council of regency, or any limitation upon the exercise of the loyal prelogatives,-except an incapacity to assent to any bill for altering the succession to the throne, or affecting the uniformity of worship in the Church of England, or the rights of the Church of Scotland And, founded upon these principles, the bill was passed with the approval of all parties 8

&lt;sup>1</sup> Act l Will IV c 2, Hansaid's 3 3 & 4 Vict c 52, Hansaid's Debates, 81d Set, 1 499, 764, Debates, 31d Set, ly 754, 850, 954. &c 1074 2 7 Will, IV and I Vict. c 72

CHAP IV

ANCIENT ENVINCES OF FRE CHOPKS —SETTLEMENT OF THE CHVIL LIST OF WILLIAM AND MARY —CHVIL LIST OF GUEST ANNE, OF GOOD I AND GOODES II —CHVIL LIST, EXEMENTIALS, AND DEFTS OF GURGORE IV, WILLIAM IV, AND HER MAJESTY. —DUCTINES OF ANCASTER AND CONSTMALL —PRIVATE PROPERTY OF THE CHOPKS —PROVISION FOR THE BOYLL FAMILY —ANABORMENT OF THE LAND REVENCES OF BEHALF OF THE FURLIC —CHVIL LIST PERSONS —FRENCHA-TIVES OF THE GOODN, IN HALFOUN TO HER POXIL FAMILY.

Vast possessions of the Crown in early times The history of the land revenues of the Crown presents as many vicessitudes, and varied fortunes, as are to be found in the domestic annals of any family in the kingdom

The entire lands of the realm were originally held of the Crown, by various feudal tenues, and the royal revenues were derived from fines, fees, first-fruits and tenths, and other profits arising from these lands, and from the rents of the ancient demesnes of the Crown To support the barbarous magnificence of lus household,—his numerous retainers, and rude hospitality,—was nearly the sole expense of the king, for, as feudal superior, he commanded the services of his tenants in the field, who fought by his side with an array of men and horses, equipped and maintained at their own expense.

Extensive forfeitures By means of escheats and forfeitures, there was even a danger of the Crown becoming the absolute proprietor of all the lands of the realm. But vast as were the king's possessions, they were not vast enough to satisfy the rapacity of his followers, and in every succeeding reign, the grants and ahenations of crown lands Grants and exceeded the escheats and forfeitures The estates of the alternations the Crown were further dimmished by wrongful approprintions, and encroachments Repenting their liberality. kings frequently resumed their former grants, and alienations improvidently made, were unjustly and violently Yet such had been the waste of the once ample revenues of the Crown, that Henry III complained that they had become too scanty to furnish his royal table, and the needy monarch was reduced to the necessity of giving tallies for the supply of beeves and grain for his household. An extensive resumption of grants, however, and the forfeiture of the estates of rebel barons, retrieved his fallen fortunes. Such was the liberality of Edward II that an ordinance was passed by Parliament prohibiting the alienation of crown lands,-which was repealed, however, by a Paihament at York, in the 15th year of his reign But the profusion of this king was supplied by producious

Richard II again, was not less profuse in his giants, nor less producal in his confiscations The Wars of the Roses were so fruitful of forfeitures, that a large proportion of the land of the realm became the property of the Crown Had it been retained, there would have been no monarchy in Europe so absolute as that of England but the spoils of one faction were eagerly grasped by the other, and the Crown gamed little by the lands which it won upon the field of battle, or wrested from their owners on the scaffold. In the reign of Henry V the estates of the Crown were considerably augmented by the appropriation of the Alien Priories, one hundred and ten in number. Yet the income of his reign, several general resumptions of grants were authorised by Parliament, in order to supply his necessities. The 1apacity of Henry VII was needed to retrieve the revenues of the Crown, and his exactions and thrift repaired the waste of former reigns. His acquisitions, however, were as nothing compared with the wholesale plunder of the monasteries, and other religious and charitable foundations, by Henry VIII, which has been valued at upwards of 30,000,000l sterling 1 Yet such were the magnificence and produgality of this king, that at his death, his treasury was found to be entirely empty The Crown was as poor as ever but the great nobles, who were enriched by grants of the Church lands-more provident than then 10 yal masterheld them fast for their descendants. In the seventh year of the neigh of James I the entire land revenues of the Crown and Duchy of Lancaster amounted to no more than 66,870l a year, while the king's debts exceeded a million 2 During his reign he sold lands to the extent of 775,000l, and left debts of about an equal amount But more evil days were at hand for the land reve-Charles I, unable to obtain supplies from Parliament, and gaining little from his illegal exactions,--was forced to sell and mortgage the property of the The Parliament, after his death, completed the spoliation, of which he had set them the example, and sold nearly all the royal estates, in order to pay the arrears due to the Parhamentary forces, and discharge the debts of the new Government. 8 At the Restoration, these sales were declared void, and many of the estates of the Crown were then recovered But they were re-

for fertures

Increase of land revenues by Henry VII and VIII

Destruction of land revenues during the Con monwealth

St John on the Land Revenues Scobell, part n 51, 106, 227, of the Crown, 68 2Ib 79

covered,-to be again squandered and dispersed. In Theu 18three years, Charles II had reduced the meome of the subsequent crown lands from 217,900l to 100,000l a year. In the waste first year of his reign he surrendered the Court of Wards and Liveries, and the military tenures, in exchange for a settlement of certain duties of excise 1, being the first instance of a surrender by the Crown, of its interest m any part of the hereditary revenues During this vergn, a large proportion of the fee-farm rents belongme to the Crown, was sold by Act of Parliament 2, and further grants of these rents were made during the reigns of William III and Queen Anne The liberality of William III to his followers, provoked remonstrances from Parliament He was even obliged to recall an enormous grant to the Earl of Portland, which conveyed to that nobleman four-fifths of the county of Denbigh, with a reserved rent of 6s 8d, payable to the Crown 8. but he compensated the Earl with other lands and manois 4

So jealous were the Commons, at this period, of the continual diminution of the hereditary revenues of the Crown, that several bills were brought in to resume all grants made by Charles II and James II 5, and to prevent further ahenations of crown lands 6 At the end of William's reign, Parliament having obtained accounts of the state of the laud revenues, found that they had been reduced by grants, alienations, incumbrances, reversions, and pensions, until they scarcely exceeded the rent-roll of a squire 7

ð

<sup>1 12</sup> Ca II c 24 1703 Com. Joun, xn 90, 16 2 22 Cm II c 6, 22 and 28 viu 208, 350 , Ib xiv 95, 269, 305, Car II c 24 5 1695 Peal Hist v 978, Com 6 In 1697 and 1699, Com Journ Journ x: 391, 395, 409 xn 90, Ib xm 62

<sup>7</sup> Com Journ, xui 478, 498 Com Journ vi 608 5 In 1697, 1699, 1700, 1702, and St John on the Land Revenues, 90

Alienations of Crown lands restrained

Such an abuse of the rights of the Crown could no longer be tolerated; and on the settlement of the civil list of Queen Anne, Parliament at length interposed to restrain it. It was now nearly too late. The sad confession was made, "that the necessary expenses of supporting the Crown, or the greater part of them, were formerly defrayed by a land 1 evenue, which had, from time to time, been impaired by the grants of former kings and queens, so that Hei Majesty's land revenues could then afford very little towards the sunport of her Government"1 Yet to preserve what was still left, it was now provided that no future lease (except a building lease) should be granted for more than thirty-one years, or three lives, and that a reasonable rent should be reserved. If such a law as this had been passed immediately after the Restoration, the land ievenues would probably have provided for the entire charge of the civil list of Queen Anne But at least the small remnant of crown lands was saved. and in that and the next two reigns, some additions were made to the loval estates, by escheats and forfeitures 2

Constitutional results of the improvidence of kungs

While this waste of the crown property had been mjurious to the public revenues, it favoured the development of the hberties of the people Kings with vast hereditary revenues, -husbanded and improved, -would have been comparatively independent of Parliament. But then improvidence gradually constrained them

Gilbert's Hist of the Exchequer, Much curious learning is to be Maddox's Hist of the Excheques and Common as examing as on position of the Coron in Waght's Tourney of the Coron in Waght's Tourney of the Coron in Resumptions, Days of the Coron in Waght's Tourney of the Coron in Resumptions, Days of the Coron in Resumptions, Days of the Coron in Resumptions, Days of the Coron in Resumptions, St. John's Observations Words (of Fends), Lond Hale's on the Land Revenues of the Crown, Hastory of the Common Law, 460, 1237 to rely upon the liberality of their subjects, and their own necessities, and the increasing expenditure of the state, at length placed them entirely under the control of Parliament

<sup>1 1</sup> Anne, c 7, s 5

No constitutional change has been more important in Importance securing popular control over the executive Govern- of a settle-ment of the ment, than the voting of supplies by the House of Com- tevenues of the Crown mons nor has any expedient been better calculated to restrain the undue influence of the Crown, than a strict settlement of its revenues by Pailiament. In the reign Revenues of Charles II, the principle of appropriating supplies of the to specific services by statute, - which had not been prior to the without previous recognition, - was formally established as one of the conditions, under which Parliament granted money for the service of the state But until the Revolution, no limitation had been imposed upon the personal expenditure of the sovereign It had been customary for Parliament to grant to the king, at the commencement of each reign, the ordinary revenues of the Crown, which were estimated to provide, in time of peace, for the support of His Majesty's dignity and civil government, and for the public defence To these were added, from time to time, special grants for extraordi-The ordinary revenues were derived. nary occasions first, from the hereditary revenues of the Crown itself, and, secondly, from the produce of taxes voted to the king for life The hereditary revenues consisted of the rents of crown lands, of feudal rights, the proceeds of the post-office, and wine hoenses, and, after the surrender of feudal tenures by Charles II, in 1660, of part of

In the reign of James II the hereditary revenues, together with the taxes voted for the king's life, VOL. I the excise duties

amounted on an average to 1,500,964£ a year.¹ Whatever remained of this annual moome, after the payment of the necessary exponses of the Government, was at the king's absolute disposal,—whether for the support of his dignity and influence, or for his pleasures and profusion. Not satisfied with these resources for his personal expenditure, there is no doubt that Chailes II applied to his own privy puise, large sums of money which had been specially appropriated by Parliament, for carrying on the war <sup>2</sup>

Settlement of the "Civil Last" of William

To prevent such abuses in future, on the accession of Wilham and Mary, Pailiament made a separate provision for the king's "Civil Last," — which embraced the support of the royal household, and the personal expenses of the king, as well as the payment of civil offices and pensions. The revenue voted for the support of the Crown in time of peace, was 1,200,000l, of which the Civil List amounted to about 700,000l, being derived from the hereditary revenues of the Crown, estimated at 400,000l a year and upwards,—and from a part of the excise duties, producing about 300,000ls The system thus introduced was continued in succeeding regins, and the Civil List still comprised not only the expenses of the sovereign.

The Civil Last comprised items of hational expenditure

Civil List of Queen Anna The Civil Last of Queen Anne was settled by Parhament in the same form, and computed at the same amount as that of William III.<sup>4</sup> Her Majesty, while she feared the revenue granted to her would fall but a portion of the civil expenditure of the state

short of that enjoyed by the late king, promised that 100.000l a year should be applied to the public service! So far, however, from fulfilling this promise, - during the twelve years of ther reign, she incurred debts amounting to 1,200,000l, which were paid off by Parliament, by way of loans charged upon the Civil List itself

The Civil List of George I was computed at 700,000 of George a year, and, during his reign, debts were incurred to the Frist the extent of 1,000,000l, which were discharged by Parliament, in the same manner 2

The hereditary revenues were continued to George II., of George with a proviso that if they should produce less than 800.000l a year, Parhament would make up the deficiency The king, however, was entitled to any surplus above that sum 3 This was an approximation to a definite Civil List, as the minimum at least was fixed For the last five years of his reign these revenues had usen, on an average, to 829,155l a year, but during the whole of his reign, they amounted to less than 800,000/4 In 1746 adebt of 456,000/ on the Civil Last was discharged by Parhament. This debt was stated by the king to have been incurred in consequence of the hereditary revenues having fallen short of 800,000l a year, and Parhament was, therefore, bound by the terms of its original contract, to make up the deficiency.

On the accession of George III, the king consented Civil Listof to make such a disposition of his interest in the hereditary revenues of the Crown in England, as Pailiament might think fit. Hitherto the Crown had enjoyed certam revenues which were calculated by Parlament to produce a sufficient mecome, but now the king agreed to accept a fixed amount as his Civil List, "for the support of his household, and the honour and dignity of the Crown." This was the first time that the direct control of Parlament over the personal expenditure of the king had been acknowledged, and it is not a little curious that so important a change in the relations of the sovereign to Parlament, should have been introduced at the very period when he was seeking to extend his pierogatives, and reader himself independent of other influences in the state. It soon appeared, however, from the debts incurred, that his Majesty was not inclined to perinit this concession to diminish the influence of the Crown.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Paul Ilist, vi 11 <sup>2</sup> 1 Geo I, c 1, Buike's Works, Report on Civil Allow, Buike's Works, in 310 <sup>1</sup> Paul Hist, vi 11 3 1 Geo II c 1 4 Report on Civil Last, 1815, p 4,

The money ansing out of the heieditary revenues, secuned by various Acts of Paihament to the king's piedecessors, was now carried to the "aggregate fund," out of which the annual sum of 723,000l was granted to his Majesty, during the continuance of the existing annuties to the Princess Dowager of Wales, the Dukc of Cumberland, and the Princess Amelie, and as these charges ceased, the amount of the Civil List was to be increased until it reached 800,000l a year. He thus accepted the minimum Civil List of his predecessor, and relinquished all claim to the surplus, which for the first eight years of his reign amounted, upon an average, to 100,000l a year.

Other sources of But the kmg enjoyed other sources of income, independent of Paulamentary control He derived a considerable amount from the Droits of the Crown and Admiralty, the 4½ per cent duties, and other casual sources of revenue in England He was in possession of the heieditary revenues of Scotland, and of a separate Civil List for Ireland He retained the rich Duchies of Cornwall and Lancaster Mr Burke estimated the total annual income of the Crown, from these various sources, at httle less than a million, exclusive of the revenues of Hanover, and the Bishopric of Osnaburgh 1 During this long reign, the Droits of the Crown and Admiralty, and the casual revenues, which were wholly withdrawn from the cognisance of Parliament, amounted to the large sum of 12,705,4611 out of which, however, he voluntarily contributed 2,600,000/ to the public service, while 5.372.8341 were appropriated as the expenses of captors, and payments to persons concerned in taking prizes. The surplus actually enjoyed by the Crown, after making these deductions amounted, therefore, to 4,732,62712 George III also succeeded to 172.605l which the late king. - more frugal than any prince since Henry VII. - had saved out of his Civil Tast 8

&lt;sup>1</sup> Com. Journ xxviii. 28. <sup>2</sup> 1 Geo III c. 1, Rep on Civil List, 1815.

But great as were these revenues, the burthens on them Charges on were still greater Places and pensions were multiplied, the Civil until the toval income was madequate to provide for them On the accession of George III, the greater part of the late king's household was retained, and, at the same time, numerous personal adherents of his Majesty were added to the establishment 4 But while the expenditure of the Civil List was mereased, the king and his family were living, not only with economy, but even with unkingly parsimony In 1762 he purchased

&lt;sup>1</sup> Present Discontents, Burke's Works, 11 281 2 Report on the Civil Last, 1815 Hans Deb , Sid Son , 143

&lt;sup>8</sup> Grenville Papers, m 144 Wraxall's Mem , 11 55 4 Walp Mem 1 25

Buckingham House, and settled it on the queen, "St James's," according to Honace Walpole, "not being a puison start enough". Here he lived in privacy, attended only by menial servants, and keeping up none of the splendour of a Court 2" In all this," said Burke, "the people see nothing but the operations of pasimony, attended with all the consequences of profusion Nothing expended—nothing saved They do not believe it to be hoaded, nor perceive it to be seent." 8

Parliamentary influence secured by the Civil Last expenditure While practising this apparent economy, the king was engaged in that struggle to increase the influence, and establish the ascendency of the Crown, which has been described elsewhere <sup>4</sup> The large expenditure of the Civil Last could not full, therefore, to be associated with the fidelity and subserviency of the court party in Palhament. The Crown was either plundered by its servants, or Pulhamentary support was purchased by places, pensions, and pecumany conjuption <sup>5</sup>

Debt upon the Civil Last, 1769 In February, 1760, before the long had yet been mne years upon the throne, the arroars of the Civil Last amounted to 513,5111, and his Magesty was obliged to apply to Palhament to discharge them. This demand was made at an untimely moment, when the people were exasperated by the persecution of Wilkes,—when the policy of the court was odious, and the king himself unpopular. But if the country was discontented, Palhament was held in safe subjection. Incurry was

&lt;sup>1</sup> Walp Mem 1 159 <sup>2</sup> The king continued this plain style of living throughout his reign —Wistalk's Mem, 1 8—10 Mi Addington, writing to his brother, 29th Dec, 1804, said he had just partalen of the king's dinner, "winch consisted of mutton chops and pudconsisted of mutton chops and pud-

dung "—Lefs of Sidmouth, 11 342 Suntian examples are to be found in Twies's Life of Loid Eddon, and in Medame D'Aiblay's Memoirs * Plesent Discontents, Works, 11

&lt;sup>8</sup> Present Discontents, Works, 280 <sup>4</sup> See Chapter I

See Chapter VI

demanded into the causes of the debt, and explanatory accounts were sought, but all investigation being resisted by ministers, the amount was granted without information In the following year, motions to inquiry into the expenditure of the Civil List were renewed, with no better success 1 Lord Chatham avowed his conviction that the Civil List revenues were expended in corrupting members of Parliament 2, and the Civil List expenditure, and the withholding from Parliament such an explanation of its causes, as had been customary in former reiens. -- formed a prominent topic in Mi Burke's celebrated pamphlet on "The Causes of the Present Discontents"

But the same causes of excessive expenditure, - Further whatever they may have been, - continued without a debt in check, and after the lanse of eight years, the king was again obliged to have recourse to Parliament, not only to discharge a debt of 618,340l, but to increase his annual Civil List to 900,000l a year On this occasion. accounts explanatory of the arrears were laid before Parliament. Ministers no longer ventured to withhold them but they were not deemed satisfactory by the Opposition Again the causes of increased expenditure were freely animadverted upon in Parliament The income of the king was compared with that of his predecessors, - the large amount of secret service money. and the increased Pension List were noticed,-and insinuations made of covert influence and corruption 8 But writing to Lord Rockingham as to a division in the Lords, says, "The division of twenty-ax on so courtly a point as paying his Majesty's debts, &lt;sup>1</sup> Pail Hist xvi 843,926, Walp and enabling him to bribe higher, him in 343, Rockingham's Mem is, I think, a very stong one "— ii 90,167 The Duke of Richmond, Rock Mem in 92

Pail Hist, xvi 849
 Pail Hist xix 103, 160, 187,

Parliament acceded to the demands of the king When the speaker, Sir Fletchei Norton, addressed the throne, on presenting the bill for the royal assent, he said, the Commons "have not only granted to your Majesty a large present supply, but also a very great additional revenue, great beyond example, great beyond your Majesty's highest expense." The speaker's uncourtly address became the subject of remark and censure in the House of Commons, but his friend, Mr Fox. having come to the rescue, he was thanked for expressing with "just and proper energy, the zeal of this House for the support of the honour and dignity of the Crown, in cheumstances of great public charge "1 His conduct, however, was not forgiven by the court, and in the next Parliament, he was punished by the loss of the speaker's chair 2 Promptly as these demands of the Crown were met,

Debates upon the Civil List,

they yet excited lasting dissatisfaction. The public expenditure and the national debt had been produgrously increased by the American Wai, when the abuses of the Civil List were again brought under the notice of Parliament In 1779 the Duke of Richmond moved an address to the Crown praying for the reduction of the Civil List, which was rejected by a majority of Mr Burke's more than two to one 3 But a few days afterwards Mi Burke gave notice of his motion on Economic Reform, with which his name has since been honourably associated On the 11th of February, 1780, being fortified by numerous petitions, he propounded his elaborate scheme This embraced a considerable reduction of offices, a diminution of expenditure, and improved administration and accounts in the various departments scheme of Economic Reform. 1780

Paul Hist xix 227 <sup>2</sup> Wiaxell's Mem 1 372

<sup>3</sup> Dec 7th, 1779, Paul Hist vx 1255

of the State, and in his masterly review, the expenditure of the Civil List attracted a large share of his scrutiny Describing the royal household, he pointed out the social changes which had taken place, and the obsolete character of many of the offices which were still retained "The royal household," he said, "has lost all that was stately and venerable in the antique manners, without retrenching anything of the cumbrous charge, of a gothic establishment "1 Examples of profusion and abuse were given, - useless offices, and offices performed by deputy,-the king's turnspit being a member of Parhament2, - jobbing, waste and peculation in every department, without restraint proposed the reduction and consolidation of offices, the diminution of the Pension List to 60,000l a year, and the payment of all pensions at the Exchequer

Mi Burke obtained leave to bring in five bills to carry out these various objects but his Establishment Bill 3 was the only one which was discussed in that session. It was read a second time, and several of its provisions were discussed in committee, but it was ultimately defeated by the Government 4 The discussions, however, led to a proposition from Lord North, for a Commission of Public Accounts

In the following year Mi Burke resumed his efforts, Mr Burke's and again obtained leave to bring in his Establishment Establishment ment Ball. Bill In advocating this measure he was boldly sup- 1781. ported by young William Pitt, who then first offered humself to the notice of Parliament The bill was lost on the second reading 5

<sup>1</sup> Pail Hist xxi 30 where it is printed at length 2 Dail, 33, and Lord Talbot's 4 Hist, xxi 714 Fall Hist xxi 1202. Wrax-3 See Pail Hist xxi 1111, all's Mem., ii 833. <sup>1</sup> Paul Hist xxi 30

Mousines of the Rockinghum Ministry, 1782

But a sudden change soon took place in the prospects of this question Lord Rockingham's administration acceded to office, pledged to economic reform, and resolved to carry it into effect Lord Rockingham, in laying his plan before the king, explained "that not a single article of the expense to be retrenched touches anything whatsoever which is personal to your Majesty, or to your Majesty's loval family, or which in the least contributes to the splendour of your court," and that in fact he only intended to reduce the patronage and influence of the ministers 1 On the 15th April, 1782, a message from the king was sent to both Houses, recommending economy in all branches of the public expenditure, and stating that he had already considered the reform and regulation of his civil establishment Well might Mr. Burke congratulate the House of Commons and the country, on so favourable a change in the policy of the Government, and on the attitude of the king towards his people In both Houses this communication was cordially received and acknowledged 2. It was soon followed by another, which though not so satisfactory. at least afforded convincing proof of the necessity of that economy which had been already recommended The king was now obliged to announce to Parhament

Civil List Debt. 1782 The king was now obliged to announce to Parlament, another debt upon his Civil List, but instead of proposing that it should be discharged, as on previous occasions, out of the general revenues of the state, he intimated that its hquidation was to be secured by intended reductions of the Civil List establishment Notwithstanding the recent additions to the Civil List, the arrears now amounted to 295,877l; and the proposed savings, instead of being available either to the king or to the country, would thus become immediately mortgaged for the payment of a debt, by annual instalments

&lt;sup>1</sup> Lord Rockingham's Letter to <sup>2</sup> Parl Hist xxii 1269 Wiax-the King —Rock Mem ii 477 all's Mem , 43—47, 54.

The Chyl List Act of Lord Rockingham, though fall- Cryl List ing short of Mr Burke's original proposal, was never- Actof 1782 theless a considerable measure Many useless offices were abolished, restraints were imposed upon the issue of secret-service money, the Pension List was diminished, and securities were provided for a more effectual supervision of the royal expenditure. And now. for the first time, the Civil Last expenditure was divided into classes, eight in number, which led to more unportant changes hereafter 1

But debt continued to be the normal condition of the Subsequent Civil List throughout the reign of George III Again debts in and again applications were renewed to Parliament. and the debts discharged at different periods after 1782, exceeded 2.300.000l From the beginning to the end of this leigh, the several arrears paid off by Parhament. exclusive of the debt of 300,000l charged on the Civil List in 1782, amounted to 3,398,00012

In defence of these continued excesses it was urged, Suiplus of that they were more than defrayed by the surplus hereditary of the hereditary revenues, which the king had surrendered, and which, in 1815, exceeded by upwards of 6.000,000l the entire expenditure of the Civil List since the accession of the king,-including all the debts which

```
1 22 Geo III c 82, Parl Hist 1814
                                                   118.857
2 In 1709 £513,511
                                           1814
                                                   100,000 (extra expenses)
                                           1816
                                                  185,000
      1777
             618.840
      1784
              60,000
                                                £3,308,001
      1786
            210,000
                                        Report on Caul List, 1815, p 4,
Speech of Mr Spring Rice, Nov
23rd, 1837 — Hansard's Debates, 1802 990,053
      1804 591.842
      1805
             10 158
                                        3rd Ser , x x x x 144
```

had been paid off by Parliament, and the charges from which the Civil List had been relieved 1

Charges removed from the Civil List

Meanwhile the Civil List continued to compuse charges wholly unconnected with the personal comfort and denity of the sovereign, - the salaries of judges. ambassadors, and other officers of state, annuities to members of the 10val family, and pensions granted for public services,-all of which were more fauly chargeable to the state revenues, than to the Civil List of the Crown From many of these charges the Civil List was. from time to time, reheved, - amounting, between the accession of George III and 1815, to 9,561,89612

Regulation of the Civil List of the Rogency

On the exputation of the first year of the Regency, in 1812, the Civil List was increased by 70,000l a year, and a special grant of 100,000l was voted to the Prince Regent 8 In 1816 the Civil List was settled at 1,083,7271, including the establishment of the king. and its expenditure was, at the same time, subjected to further regulation It was relieved from some of the annurties to the royal family the payments on account of the several classes of expenditure were defined and controlled, and the expenses of the royal household were subjected to the supervision and audit of a treasury officer, the auditor of the Chyrl List 4

Civil List on accession of George IV

King George IV, on his accession, expected a larger Civil List than he had enjoyed as Prince Regent , but yielding to the persuasion and remonstrances of his ministers, he stated in his speech from the throne, that so far from desiring any arrangement which would lead to the imposition of new buithers upon his people, he had no wish to alter the settlement adopted by Parliament m 1816 5

```
1 Report on Civil List, 1815, p 4
```

<sup>4 56</sup> Geo III c 46 <sup>2</sup> Ibid., p 5 <sup>5</sup> 52 Geo. III., c 6 7, Hans Deb 1st Ser., vy. 151, &c 5 Twiss's Life of Eldon, in 363, Hansaid's Debates, 2nd Ser. 1 11 This concession, "if report be

The Civil List being now free from the expenses of Other 18the late king, was fixed by Parliament at 845,7271 venues of the Crown

But during the whole of this reign the king enjoyed, in addition to this income, the hereditary revenues of Scotland, amounting on an average to 109,000l, and the Civil List for Ireland of 250,000l He also received the Droits of the Crown and Admiralty, the 41 per cent duties, the West India duties, and other casual revenues, which were still vested in the Crown and independent of Parliament 1 King William IV, on his accession, for the first time Challest sun endered the interest of the Crown in all these sources of William of revenue, and accepted a Civil List of 510,000l future expenditure of this amount was divided into five different classes, to each of which a specific annual sum was appropriated, including a Pension Last of 75,000l At the same time, the Civil List was still further relieved from charges, which more properly belonged to the civil government of the State. These charges included judicial salaries,-which had been paid partly out of the Civil List, partly out of the Consolidated Fund, and partly out of the fees of the Courts, - the salaries and pensions of the diplomatic service. - and numerous miscellaneous expenses 2

These arrangements were not concluded until the accounts of the Civil List expenditure had been referred to a select committee of the House of Commons, and freely investigated The Wellington ministry resisted this investigation, and fell when the settlement of the Civil List was left to the Whig ministry of Lord Grey 8 The committee, in their inquiries, not thinking it con-

true, was obtained by nothing but Charges, 1831, 1 Geo IV c 1 the most determined refusal of the Ministers to do more" - Mb T Grenville to the Marquess of Bucking-ham, May 4th, 1820 1 Report on Civil Government

<sup>2</sup> Report on Civil Government Charges, 1831, Report on Civil List Charges, 1833 3 Hans Deb., 31d Ser., 1 429, 526

sistent with the respect due to his Majesty to scrutinise the details of his domestic household, never theless recommended several reductions in the salaries of the officers of state, amounting in the aggregate to 11,529/1. The king, however, remonstrated with his ministers against the proposed reduction, saying —"If the people, according to the new (reform) bill, are really to govern the House of Commons, and the House of Commons is to decide upon the amount of salary I am to give to my servants, then the pierogatives of the Chown will in reality pass to the people, and the monarchy cannot exist." The ministers yielded to this remonstrance, and induced the House of Commons to restore the Civil Last to the amount originally proposed.

Civil List of Hei Majesty

The Civil Last of Queen Victoria was settled on the same principles as that of William IV, and amounted to 385,000l, the only material variation being that in heu of the Pension List of 75,000l, her Majesty was empowered to grant pensions annually to the extent of 1,200l. The Crown was thus finally restricted to a definite annuity for the support of its dignity, and for the personal comfort of the sovereign <sup>8</sup>

No debts upon the Civil List during three icigns It may be added, as at once a proof of the wisdom of these antangements, and of the improved administration of our later sovereigns, that neither in the reign of Her Most Gracious Majesty, norm the reigns of George IV and Willium IV, has any application been made to Paulament for the discharge of debts upon the Civil List 4

Importance of relieving While the Civil Last has been diminished in amount,

1 Report on the Civil List Accounts, March 21st, 1831.
2 Roehnel's Hist of the Wing Ministry, ii. 160, Hassard's Dobutes, 5rd Ser, nii, 969

its rehef from charges with which it had formerly been Good Lost incumbered has placed it beyond the reach of misconstruction The Crown repudiates the indirect influences charges exercised in former reigns, and is free from imputations of corruption And the continual increase of the civil charges of the Government, which was formerly a reproach to the Crown, is now a matter for which the House of Commons is alone responsible In this, as in other examples of constitutional progress, apparent encroachments upon the Crown have but added to its time dignity, and conciliated, more than ever, the confidence and affections of the people

Until the accession of her Majesty, every previous Rovenues sovereign of her royal house had also enjoyed the of Hanover revenue of the Kingdom of Hanover, which was now detached from the Crown of England Former sovereigns had also inherited considerable personal property from their predecessors but her Majesty succeeded to none whatever The Crown, however, still retains Duches of the revenues of the Duchies of Lancaster and Corn-Lancaster and Corn-land Co wall The former are the property of the reigning wall sovereign, the latter the independent inheritance of the Pimce of Wales, as Duke of Coinwall The estates of both these duchies have been largely augmented by judicious management, and by vigilant attention to the interests of the Crown

At the commencement of her Majesty's reign, the gross Revenue of revenue of the Duchy of Lancaster amounted to 23,0381, the Duchy of Lancaster and the charges to 14,1261, leaving a net revenue of no ter more than 8.912l In 1859 the gross revenue had increased to 45,4361, and the net revenue to 31,3491, of which 25,000*l* were paid to her Majesty's Privy Puise <sup>1</sup> Revenue of When George, Prince of Wales came of age in 1783, the Ducky

Paul Papers, 1837-8, (665), 1860, (98)

the moome of the Duchy of Cornwall was less than 13,000? a year On the accession of her Majesty the gross moome was 28,450?, and the payments were 12,670?, leaving a net moome of 15,768? In 1850, the gross moome had increased to 63,704?, and the net revenue to 50,777?, of which no less than 40,785? were paid over to the tustees and treasure of his Royal Highness the Prince of Wales. And out of this ample revenue, accumulations exceeding half a million, are said to have been myested for the future benefit of his Royal Highness

Private property of the sovereggra

In addition to these public revenues, the rights of the Crown to its own private property have been secured The alienation of the hand revenues of the Chown having been restrained by the 1st Anne, a doubt subsequently arose, whether the restrictions of that Act extended to the private property of the sovereign, acquired by puichase, gift of devise, or by descent, from persons not being kings or queens of the realin. But such restrictions being without any colour of justice, an Act was passed, in 1800, declaring that property of subjects <sup>2</sup> On the accession of George IV, however, doubts were suggested whether this Act applied to property acquired, by the reigning sovereign, before he had succeeded to the throne, which were set at rest by statute in 1823.

Provision for the royal family While the Civil List has been ample for the support of the personal dignity of the Crown, Parliament has also provided liberally for the maintenance of the various members of the royal family A separate anumity to the Queen Consort, with a large downy in case of the death of the king,—annuties to the brothers, sisters,

Parl Papers, 1837-8, (605),
 3 4 Geo IV c. 18, Hansard's 1880, (13)
 Dobates, 2nd Ser, vnn. 509, 651
 3 9 & 40 Geo. III c 88

and other relatives of his Majesty,-establishments for each of his children on coming of age, and even allowances for their education and maintenance, - marriage portions for princesses of the royal house,-such are the claims which have been made upon the liberality of Parliament, in addition to the Civil List To these must be added, in the reign of George III., the debts of the Prince of Wales

The prince came of age in 1783, - a time ill- Debts of suited for heavy demands upon the public purse of Wales. The people were still suffering under the accumulated burthens of the American War, and the abuses of the Civil List had recently undergone a rude exposure. But the prince's Whig friends in the Coalition Ministry, overlooking these considerations, proposed a settlement of 100,000l a year They were glad to have this opportunity of strengthening their political connection with the heir-apparent. But the king was more sensible than they, of the objections to such a proposal at that tame, and being tenacious of his own power,-loving his son but little, and hating his ministers very much,-he declined an arrangement which would have secured the independence of the prince, and drawn him still more closely to the party most obnoxious to himself He agreed, therefore, to make the prince an allowance of 50,000l a year out of his Civil List, which had already proved unequal to his own expenditure, and limited his demand upon Parhament to an outfit of 60,000l1 To a prudent prince such an allowance would have been ample: to the spendthrift and the gamester it was a pittance The prince was soon in difficulties, and his "debts of honour" to the blackless of Newmarket, and the moome of the Duchy of Cornwall was less than 13,0007 ayea. On the accession of her Majesty the gross moome was 28,4561, and the payments were 12,6704, leaving a net moome of 15,7801. In 1859, the gross moome had increased to 63,704L, and the net revenue to 50,7771, of which no less than 40,7851 were epaid over to the trustees and treasurer of his Royal Highness the Pimce of Wales. And out of this ample revenue, accumulations exceeding half a million, are said to have been myested for the future benefit of his Royal Highness.

<sup>1 25</sup>th June, 1783, Paul Hist xxiii Times of Fox, ii 8, Lord Auck-1030, Lord J. Russell's Life and land's Cor. 1 54, VOL I

Private property of the sovereigns

In addition to these public revenues, the rights of the Crown to its own private property have been secured. The altenstano of the land revenues of the Crown having been restrained by the 1st Anne, a doubt subsequently arose, whether the restrictions of that Act extended to the private property of the soveragn, acquired by pinichase, gift or devise, or by descent, from persons not being kings or quicens of the realm. But such restrictions being without any colour of justice, an Act was passed, in 1800, declaring that property of subjects <sup>2</sup> On the accession of George IV, however, doubts were suggested whether this Act applied to property acquired, by the regiming sover legit, before he had succeeded to the throne, which were set at rest by statute in 1823

Provision for the royal family While the Cavil Last has been ample for the support of the personal dignity of the Crown, Parliament has also provided liberally for the maintenance of the various members of the royal family A separate annuity to the Queen Consort, with a large dowry in case of the death of the king, — annuities to the brothers, sisters,

&lt;sup>1</sup> Pail Papers, 1837-8, (605); <sup>3</sup> 4 Geo IV c 18, Hansard's 1880, (13) Debates, 2nd Sei, viii 509, 651

and other relatives of his Majesty,-establishments for each of his children on coming of age, and even allowances for their education and maintenance, - marriage portions for princesses of the royal house,-such are the claims which have been made upon the liberality of Parliament, in addition to the Civil List To these must be added, in the reign of George III., the debts of the Prince of Wales

The prince came of age in 1783, -a time ill- Debts of suited for heavy demands upon the public purse of Wales. The people were still suffering under the accumulated

burthens of the American War, and the abuses of the Civil List had recently undergone a rude exposure But the prince's Whig friends in the Coalition Ministry, overlooking these considerations, proposed a settlement of 100,000l a year They were glad to have this opportunity of strengthening their political connection with the heir-apparent But the king was more sensible than they, of the objections to such a proposal at that time, and being tenacious of his own power. loving his son but little, and hating his ministers very much, he declined an arrangement which would have secured the independence of the prince, and drawn him still more closely to the party most obnoxious to himself He agreed, therefore, to make the prince an allowance of 50.000 a year out of his Civil List, which had already proved unequal to his own expenditure, and limited his demand upon Parliament to an outfit of 60,000l1 To a prudent prince such an allowance would have been ample, to the spendthuft and the gamester it was a pittance The prince was soon in difficulties, and his "debts of honour" to the blackless of Newmarket, and

VOL I

<sup>1 25</sup>th June, 1788, Paul Hist xxiii Times of Fox, u 8, Lord Auck-1030, Lord J. Russell's Life and land's Cor. 1, 54

the sharpers of St. James's, left little for the payment of the royal tradesmen On the revision of the Civil Last in 1786, nother effort was made by the prince's friends to obtain for him a more hieral settlement, but Mr Pitt was cold, and the king mexonable The prince broke up his establishment, yet fulled to pay his debts

In 1787 his affans had become desperate, when the hen-apparent was saved from 1 um by the friendly intervention of a London aldciman Mr Alderman Newnham having given notice, in the House of Commons, of an address to the king on the subject of the prince's debts, and being supported by the friends of his Royal Highness, the king thought it better to arrange a compromise This resulted in the addition of 10,000% a year to the moome of the prince out of the Civil List, and the voting of 161,000l for the payment of his debts, and 20,000l for the buildings at Carlton House 1 No. less than 63,700l were afterwards granted by Parliament, at different times, for the completion of this costly palace2, which, after being the scene of tinsel splendour and bad taste for little more than twenty-five years, was rased to the ground to make room for metropolitan unprovements

The kmg assured the House of Commons that the prince had propused to confine his future expenses within his moome, yet so little were these good intentions canized out, that in 1702 his Royal Highness confessed to Lord Malmesbury that his debts then amounted to 370,0001* In 1795 they had increased to the extraordinary sum of 650,0002, when he was extricated from these embarrassments, by his ill-fated mar-

<sup>1</sup> Parl Hust xxv. 1010, 1048, 1034, 1207, Tomlune's Life of Prit, 1791, and 27,5007 in 1785. 1 Lord Malmesbury's Cor n. 415, 415, 417, 4

mage with Caroline of Brunswick. To propose a grant for the payment of these debts, was out of the question. but an additional annuity of 65,000l was settled upon him, of which nearly the whole was appropriated, for many years, to the gradual discharge of his incumbrances 1 These were ultimately paid off, and the spendthrift prince,-though still fond of building and enlarging palaces at the public expense,-learned, in his old age, to husband his own resources, with the caution of a miser

Parliament has since cheerfully granted every suitable provision for members of the royal family but its liberality has not been discredited by any further application for the payment of their debts

We have seen that the income arising from the land Mismarevenues of the Crown was surrendered to the state, by ansyment George III, in exchange for a Civil List; but for a long revenues on behalf of time the state was deprived, by mismanagement, of the the public greater part of the benefit to which it was entitled Leases were improvidently, if not corruptly, granted,- often without any survey of the property, and even without a copy or counterpart of the lease being retained by the Surveyor-General, on behalf of the Crown renewals were conceded at the pleasure of the tenants, while extravagant fees, payable at public offices, instead of being charged to the tenants, were deducted from the fines, and became a grievous burthen upon the revenues of the Crown. At least seven-eighths of the value of the land were received in the shape of fines, and one-eighth only in rent; and these fines, again, were computed at high rates of interest by which the payments to the Crown were further diminished.

Encroachments and waste were permitted upon the royal demesnes, with scarcely a check Such musmanagement, however, was not due to any want of officers, appointed to guand the public interests On the contary, their verynumber served to facilitate frauds and evasions Instead of being a check upon one another, these officers acted independently; and their guorance, incapacity, and neglect went far to run the property under their charge. As an illustration of the system it may be stated, that the land-tax was frequently allowed twice over to lessees; from which erior alone, a loss was sustained of upwards of fifteen hundred pounds a year. Even without mismanagement, the wide dispersion of the estates of the Crown multiplied the charges of superintendence and administration.

&lt;sup>1</sup> King's Message, April 27th, Ibid xxxii 90, 135, 35 Geo III 1795, Parl Hist xxxi 1464, 1496, c 129.

From these various causes the noble estates of the Crown, for the first twenty-five years of the reign of George III produced an average net revenue httle exceeding six thousand pounds a year 1 Some of these abuses were exposed by Mr Burke in 1780, who suggested as a remedy, a general sale of the Crown lands 2 In 1786 the king sent a message to Parliament, by the advice of Mr Pitt, recommending an inquity into the condition of the woods, forests, and land revenues of the Crown, and a commission was accordingly anpointed by Act, to make that inquiry, and to suggest improvements in the system of management 8 The recommendations of this commission led to the passing of an Act in 1794, by which an improved administration of the land revenues was introduced4, and means were taken for making them more productive. This commission had reported that, in their opinion, the estates which had hitherto vielded so insignificant a revenue might, under improved management, eventually produce no less than 400,000l a year Existing interests postponed for a time the realisation of so sanguine an estimate · but in 1798 the Crown lands were valued at 201,250l a year : in 1812 they were valued at 283.160% in 1820 they actually yielded 114.852% in 1830, they produced 373,770l, and in the year ending 31st March, 1860, they returned an income of 416.53018

&lt;sup>1</sup> Reports of Commissioners of Inquiry into the Woods, Forests, and Land Revenues, under Act 26 (See III. c. 87.

But when the land revenues of the Crown were at Approprialength becoming nearly an equivalent for the Civil Last, proceeds of a considerable proportion of the income was still the land diverted from the Exchequer The land revenues, and the woods and forests, were originally managed, each by a Surveyor-General, but in 1810 the functions of these two offices were combined in a Commission of Woods, Forests, and Land Revenues 4 In 1832 the superintendence of public works was added to the duties of this commission, when it soon became evident that what they received with one hand, they were too ready to pay over to the other The revenue derived from the property of the Crown, was applied with too much facility, to the execution of public works and improvements the Exchequer was deprived of the funds which were due to it, in exchange for the Civil List, and Parhament was denied its proper control over an important branch of the public expenditure To airest this evil another administrative change was necessary, and in 1851 the departments of Woods and Forests and of Public Works were again entirely separated 6 Hence, whatever may be the net proceeds of the property of

Report of Surveyor-General, Com Journ liu. 187

<sup>2 1</sup>st Report of Comm of Woods and Forests, 1812

&lt;sup>2</sup> Finance Accounts, 1860. 4 50 Geo III c 65 5 2 & S Will IV c 1.

<sup>6 14 &</sup>amp; 15 Vict c 41.

the Crown, they form part of the public revenue; and whatever sums may be needed for public works, are voted by Parliament out of the general income of the state

Civil Last Pensions

A very important part of the expenditure of the Civil List has been caused, in every reign but the present, by the payment of pensions The grant of pensions by the Crown has so often been the subject of political discussion. that a brief explanation of the law and usage by which they were granted, and the funds from which they were payable, will not be devoid of constitutional interest

Restrictions upon grants of pensions upon crown

Pilor to the reign of Queen Anne, the Crown had exercised the right of charging its hereditary revenues with pensions and annuities, and it had been held that the king had power, in law, to bind his successors 1 But on the accession of Queen Anne, in 1701, when alienations of crown lands were for the first time restrained by Parliament2, it was also provided that no portion of the hereditary revenues 8 could be alienated for any term, longer than the life of the reigning king 4

Pensionson the herechtary revennes

This act, however, being passed before the union with Scotland, did not extend to the hereditary revenues of the Scottish crown Nor was any similar Act passed m the Parhament of Ireland, restraining grants from the hereditary revenues of Ireland neither did the Act of Anne extend to the 41 per cent duties Subsequently to this Act, pensions on the heieditary revenues of the Crown in England could only be granted during the life of the reigning sovereign, but were practically re-granted at the commencement of every reign But pensions charged on the hereditary revenues of fied in the Act were these the here-ditary duties on beer, ale, or other uncustomed and prohibited goods.

Trials, xiv 3-43

<sup>1</sup> Bankens Case, 1691, State liquous, the post-office, first-fruits rails, xrv 3—43 squa, p 109

3 The headstary revenues special compositions, and estimes of monositions, and estimes of monositions and estimes of monositions and estimes of monositions and estimes of monositions and estimates of monositions and e

Scotland and Ireland, and on the 41 per cent duties. continued to be granted for the lives of the grantees

On the accession of George III, the larger branches of Pensions on the hereditary revenues of the Crown in England being the Crown surrendered in exchange for a fixed Civil List, the pensions which had previously been paid out of the hereditary revenues, were henceforth paid out of the Civil List There was no limit to the amount of the pensions so long as the Civil List could meet the demand, and no principle by which the grant of them was regulated. but the discretion of the Crown and its advisers

No branch of the public expenditure was regarded Jealousy of with so much jealousy, as that arising out of the uniestricted power of granting pensions by the Crown Not only did it involve a serious public burthen.-being one of the principal causes of the Civil List debts. - but it increased the influence of the Crown, and impaired the independence of Parliament Mr. Burke, in bringing forward his scheme of economical reform in 1780. dwelt much on the excessive amount of the Pension List, and the absence of proper regulations, and particularly adverted to a custom which then prevailed, of granting pensions on a private list, during pleasure, by which dangerous corruption might be practised Mi Burke proposed that the English Pension List should be gradually reduced to 60,000l, and that pensions should be restricted to the reward of ment, and "real public charity;" extraordinary cases being in future provided for by an address of either house of Parhament.

By the Civil List Act of the Rockingham adminis- Restriction tration in 17821, the power of granting pensions was upon the grunt of considerably limited It was provided that until the pensions in

Pension List should be reduced to 90,000l, no pension above 300l a year should be granted that the whole amount of pensions bestowed in any year should not exceed 600l, a list of which was directed to be laid before Parliament, that the entire Pension List should afterwards be restricted to 95,000l, and that no pension to any one person should exceed 1200l This Act fully recognised the principles of Mr Burke's plan. it affirmed almost in his very words, that by the usage of granting secret pensions during pleasure, "secret and dangerous corruption may hereafter be practised," and it directed that in future all pensions should be paid at the Exchequer It further acknowledged the principle that pensions ought to be granted for two causes only, - viz. as a royal bounty for persons in distress, or as a neward for desert

Irish Pen-

So far, therefore, the English Pension List was regulated, and made subject to Parhamentary control But the Crown still retained ample means, from other sources, of rewarding political or personal services ditary revenues of the Crown, in Ireland, amounting to the net sum of 275,102l, were still at the sole disposal of the Crown, and were even alienable, so as to bind future sovereigns. It is natural that this convenient fund should have been largely charged with pensions They had been granted in every form, -during the pleasure of the Crown, - for the life of the sovereign, - for terms of years, for the life of the grantee, and for several lives in being, or in reversion As there was no control whatever over such grants, the Pension List was continually increasing Complaints had long been made of the reckless produgality of the Crown in bestowing pensions; and so far back as 1757, the Irish House of Commons had unanimously resolved "that the granting of so much of the public revenue in pensions is an improvident disposition of the revenue, an injury to the Crown, and detrimental to the people "Yet the Pension List, which in 1757 had amounted to 40,000l, was trebled in the first thirty years of George III; and, in 1793, had reached the prodigious sum of 124,000/ But the abuse had now worked itself out, and could be tolerated no longer. In that year, therefore, the Government itself proposed a change, which was readily adopted by the Irish Parliament 1 The hereditary revenues were surrendered in Lieland, - as they had previously been surrendered in England, - in exchange for a fixed Civil List of 145,000l, exclusive of pensions, and a Pension Last of 124,000l, to be reduced to 80,000l Meanwhile the Crown was restrained from granting pensions in any one year exceeding 1200l but still retained and exercised the power of granting pensions for life, and in reversion. It was not until 1813 that the Irish Pension List was reduced to 80,0001, as contemplated by this Act On the accession of George IV, this Last was further reduced to 50,000l grants exceeding 1200l in one year, being permitted until that reduction had been effected 2

The hereditary revenues of the Crown, in Scotland, Scotch Penremained exempt from parliamentary control until 1810 At that time, the pensions charged upon them amounted to 39,000l It was then arranged by Parliament that no amount greater than 800l should be granted in any one year, until the pensions had been reduced to 25,000l., and that no pension exceeding 300l a year should be given to any one person 8

There was still one fund left beyond the control of Pensionson

the 4½ per

Palhament, and of course amply charged with pensions The 4½ per cent duties were not surrendered until 1830, when William IV gave up his own life interest in them . the pensions previously granted being still payable by the state.

Consolidation of the Pension Lists

At this time, the three pension lists of England, Scotland, and Ireland, were consolidated, and the entire Civil Pension List for the United Kingdom was reduced from 145,7501 to 75,000l; the remainder of the pensions being charged upon the Consolidated Fund.

Regulation of pensions in 1837

Finally, on the accession of her present Majesty, the tight of the Crown to grant pensions was 1e-stricted to 12004 a year Such pensions were now confined, according to the terms of a resolution of the House of Commons of the 18th Feb 1834, to "such persons as have just claims on the royal beneficence, or who, by their personal services to the Crown, by the performance of duties to the public, or by their useful discoveries in seience and attainments in literature and the arts, have mented the gracious consideration of their sovereigh, and the gratitude of their country" the same time an inquiry was directed by the House of Commons to be made into the existing Pension Last, which resulted in the voluntary surrender of some pensions, and the suspension or discontinuance of others "

The pensions thus reduced in amount, and subjected to proper regulation, have since been beyond the reach of constitutional jealousy. They no longer afford the means of corruption,—they add little to the influence of the Crown,—they impose a trifling burthen on the people,—and the names of those who receive the royal bounty, are generally such as to command respect and sympathy

<sup>1 1</sup> Vict c. 2; Report on Civil Report on Pensions, 24th July, List, Dec. 5th, 1837

Such being the pecuniary relations of the Crown Powers of and royal family to Parliament, let us take a brief the king over the review of the relations of the loyal family to the reign-royal faing sovereign

Among the prerogatives of the Crown is to be reckoned a more than parental authority over the royal family, and, in 1772, the king sought the aid of Parhament in enlarging his powers The Duke of Marriage Gloucester had been married for several years to the of the Countess Dowager of Waldegrave but had not pub-Gloucester licly acknowledged her as his consoit, nor had she assumed his title 1 At court she was neither recognised as his wife, nor discountenanced as his mistress but held an equivocal position between these two characters

But in the autumn of 1771, another of the king's of the brothers, the Duke of Cumberland, announced to the Duke of Cumberking his marriage with Mrs. Horton, whom he at once land, called Duchess of Cumberland By a singular coincidence, his bride was a daughter of Lord Inham, and a sister of the famous Colonel Luttrell, whom the court party had put into Wilkes's seat for Middlesex The mortification of the king, was only to be equalled by the malicious triumph of Wilkes The family which had been made the instrument of his oppression, had now brought shame upon the king 2 The Duke and Duchess were not only forbidden to appear at court themselves but their society was interdicted to all who desired to be admitted to the palace 8 At first the king was not without hope that the validity of the marriage might be questioned It had been solemnised without the usual formalities prescribed by the law but the royal family had been excepted from Lord Hardwicke's Marriage Act, by the express command of George II., who would not allow restraints, intended only for his subjects, to be imposed upon his own family 1 Such restraints might now have postponed, or even prevented this hateful marriage. The alliance of the Duko of Cumberland with a subject, was followed by the public avowal of his marriage by the Duke of Gloucester, whose wife's position would have been seriously compromised by any longer concealment

&lt;sup>1</sup> Walpole's Mem , m 402,408 of Wilkes, that new revenge always <sup>2</sup> Walpole says, "Could punishment be more severe than to be sunk to the lowest ebb!"—Mem. thus scomged by their own instru- 1v 356 ment? And how singular the fate 3 Ibid 362.

The king was now resolved to impose such restrictions upon future marriages in his own family, as had never been contemplated for his subjects And, in truth, if alliances with persons not of royal blood were to be prevented, the king and his brothers had given proof enough of the dangers to which princes are exposed In his youth the king had been himself in love with Lady Sarah Lennox 2 the Duke of York had been attached to Lady Mary Coke, and now his Majesty was deploring the mairiages of his brothers

King's power over his grand-children

The prerogative claimed by the Crown, in matters concerning the royal family, was already considerable In 1718, King George I, when in open enmity with his son, the Prince of Wales, maintained that he had power, by virtue of his prerogative, to direct the education of his grandchildren, and even to dispose of them in marriage, to the exclusion of the parental authority

she broke her leg while out riding, 2 Mr. Grenville relates in his and during her absence, the Dury, that the lung actually no-posed to marry her, and that her engagement with Lord Newbottle—comes with Lord Newbottle was consequently broken off but Grenv Papers, 1v 200 of the plince A question was submitted to the judges : and ten out of the twelve, led by Lord Chief Justice Parker, afterwards Lord Macclesfield, decided in favour of the king's claim 1 Even the two dissentient judges. who were of opinion that the education of the king's grandchildren belonged to their father, vet held, "that the care and approbation of their marriages, when grown up, belong to the king of this realm,"2

Walpole's Mem. 1v. 359

It was now proposed to enlarge this prerogative, and Royal Marextend the king's powers, by the authority of the law mage Act, On the 20th February, 1772, a message from the king was delivered to both Houses of Parliament, stating that he was desirous "that the right of approving all marriages in the royal family (which ever has belonged to the kings of this realm, as a matter of public concern) may be made effectual," and recommending to their consideration the expediency of guarding "the descendants of his late Majesty George II" (other than the issue of princesses married into foreign families), from marrying without the approbation of the king

On the following day, the Royal Marriage Bill was Prerogapresented to the House of Lords The preamble affirmed tree eduniethe prerogative, as claimed in the message, to its fullest gard to extent, and the wisdom and expediency of the king's rages. recommendation The bill provided that no descendant of George II (except the issue of princesses married into foreign families) should be capable of contracting matrimony, without the king's previous consent, signified under his sign-manual, and declared in council: and that any marriage contracted without such consent. should be null and void There was a proviso, however.-which it seems had not been contemplated.

&lt;sup>1</sup> St T<sub>1</sub> xv 1195 Lord Camp- <sup>2</sup> St T<sub>1</sub> xv, 1225. bell's Lives, 1v p 521.

when the message was delivered, — enabling members of the royal family above twenty-five years of age, to marry without the king's consent, after having given twelve months' previous notice to the Privy Council, unless in the mean time, both Houses of Parliament should signify their disapprobation of the marriage. This concession, it is said, was caused by the resignation of Mr Fox, who intended to oppose the measure, and by the disapprobation of some of the advises of the Crown. It was also provided that any person solemnising, or assisting, or being present at the celebration of such prohibited mairrages, should mean the penalties of treemium.

This was unquestionably the king's own measure, and was reluctantly adopted by his ministers views of prelogative were exalted; and in his own family at least, he was resolved that his authority should be supreme The absolute control which he now sought for, over members of his family of full age, was not a little startling. First, as to his claim of prerogative Had it ever yet been asseited to the same extent? It had been recognised by the "grand opinion"-as it was called,-of the judges in 1718, so far as regarded the king's grandchildren, but no farther. and it is impossible to read the arguments of the judges in that case, without being impressed with the slender grounds, strained constructions of law and precedent, and far-fetched views of expediency, upon which then conclusion was founded. As a matter of state policy, it may be necessary that the king should be empowered to negotiate alliances for the royal family. and for that purpose should have more than parental authority But the present claim extended to brothers of whatever age,-to uncles, and to cousins So comprehensive a claim could not be at once admitted This question, therefore, was put to the judges . "is the Question to king entrusted by law with the care and approbation the judges. of the marriages of the descendants of his late Majesty George II., other than his present Majesty's own childien, during their minorities?" As this question extended to all descendants of George II, whether within this kingdom or not, nine judges unanimously answered it in the negative; and to another question, more restricted, they replied, "that the care and approbation of the marriages of the king's children and grandchildren, and of the presumptive hen to the Crown (other than the issue of princesses married into forcion families) do belong to the kings of this realm, but to what other branches of the royal family such care and approbation extend, we do not find precisely determined." It was plain that the bill declared the prerogative to be much more extensive, than that allowed by the judges Yet in spite of their opinion, the Lord Chancellor, Lord Apsley, with an efficiency worthy of Lord Thurlow, said that "he would defend every clause, every sentence, every word, every syllable, and every letter" in the bill, and "would not consent to any amendment whatsoeven!" The prerogative, he asserted, was founded in its "importance to the state." an argument which might be extended to any other power claimed by the Crown, on the same ground.

The arbitrary character of the bill was conspicuous Arbitrary It might be reasonable to prescribe certain rules for the of this Act

&lt;sup>1</sup> Paul Hist, xvii, 987

marriage of the royal family, as that they should not marry a subject, - a Roman Catholic, - or the member of any 10yal house at war with this country, without the consent of the king but to prescribe no rule at all save the absolute will of the king himself, was a violation of all sound principles of legislation Again, to extend the minority of princes and princesses to twenty-five, created a harsh exception to the general law, in regard to marriages 1 The prohibition of a marriage might continue until the age of twentysix, and required nothing but the vote of a Parhament subservient to the Crown, to render it perpetual, and this not by virtue of any general principle of law -human or divine, - but by the arbitrary will of a superior power

But the personal will of the king triumphed over all opposition, whether of argument or numbers, and he was implacable against those who opposed it 2. The bill was passed iapidly through the House of Lords, though not without one protest, signed by fourteen peers, and another signed by seven, in which the most material objections to the measure were concisely expressed. In the Commons the bill met with a more strenuous and protracted opposition -the Lords' Journals were searched for the opinion of the judges,-and the most serious arguments against the measure were ascend the throne at eighteen, yet might not marry till twenty-five "Quoth Tom to Dick,-'Thou at a And little know'st of life [fool, Alas I 'tis easier fai to rule

A kingdom, than a wife "-Parl Hist xvn 407.

<sup>2</sup> Fox's Mem. 1 75, Lord Chat- Fox's Mem. 1, 81,

A squb appeared m answer to ham said of the Bill, "the doctrine the objection that a prince might of the Royal Manager Bill is cartamly new-fangled and impudent, and the extent of the powers given wanton and tyrannical."— Letter to Land Shelburne, April 3rd, 1772, Corr 1y 208

Horace Walpole said, "Nevel was an Act passed against which so much. and for which so little was said"- ably and learnedly disensed. But it was still earned with a high hand. The doors of the House were closed against all stiangers.—peers in vain sought admission below the bar .-- and the Government even went so far as to refuse the printing of the bill, and supported then refusal by a large majority. No amendment was suffered to be made, except one of pedantic form, sucgested by the speaker, that the king's consent to a marriage should be signified under the greal seal, and on the 24th March the bill was passed have since been made, without success, to repeal this law 1, and to evade its provisions, but it has been inflexibly maintained time mailinge with Mrs Fitzheibert, a Roman Catholic Prince of His marriage being without the king's consent, and consequently invalid, the princely libertine ventured to satisfy the scruples of his paramour, and to include his own passions; while he was released from the sacred obligations of the marriage tie, and saved from the forfeiture of his succession to the Crown, which would have been the legal consequence of a valid marriage with a Roman Catholic Even his pretended marriage. though void in law, would have raised embarrassing doubts and discussions concerning the penal provisions of the Bill of Rights, and, if confessed, would undoubtedly have exposed him to obloquy and discredit The punce, therefore, denied the fact of his mairiage. and made his best friend the unconscious instrument

In 1785 the Prince of Wales contracted a clandes- Socret mai-

VOL. I.

of this falsehood and deception 2

&lt;sup>1</sup> By Loid Holland, in 1820, the Prince, Dec 10th, 1785, dis-Hansaid's Debates, New Sei, i suading his Royal Highness from 1099 the marriage — For's Mem ii 278, <sup>2</sup> Pail Hist xxvi 1070 See an 284, 287 — The pinnes confessed his mailings to Lord Gley, Ibid. 280.

Marriages of the Duke of Sussex

The Duke of Sussex was twice mained without the eonsent of the Crown, first, in 1793, to Lady Augusta Murray, and, later in life, to Lady Cecilia Underwood His first marriage having been solemuised abroad, a question was raised whether it was rendered invalid by the Royal Marriage Act It was again celebrated in England, where it was unquestionably illegal

The king immediately directed a suit of nullity of manuage to be commenced by his proctor, and it was adjudged by the Court of Arches, that the marriage was absolutely null and void 1

In 1831 the law officers of the Crown were consulted by the government as to the validity of this marriage, and their opinions confirmed the judgment of the Court of Arches On the death of the Duke of Sussex in 1843. Su Augustus D'Este, the son of his Royal Highness by this mairinge, claimed the dukedom and other honours of his tather. The mairinge had been solemnised at Rome in 1793, according to the rites of the Church of England, by a clergyman of that establishment, and would have been a valid contract between British subiccts but for the lestiletions of the Royal Mailiage Act. and it was contended before the House of Lords, that the operation of that Aet could not be extended beyond the British dominions But it was the unanimous opinion of the judges,-in which the House of Lords concurred,-that the prohibition of the statute was personal, and followed the persons to whom it applied, out

Load J Rassall's Lafe and Tumes of manitree of them will he found in Fev. an 177, every Load Hollmann and Mem of the Whig Patty, n 129, et al. (1998) All Mem of the Whig Patty, n 129, et al. (1998) All Mem of Mar First and the State of the Mem of Mar First and the Membrane and Andam's Reports, n 400, Burn's the decembrane burnerage do no. Eec Law, n 438, Ann Reg 1794, fall within the design of this work, p. 23 but a most ammated and graphic of the realm, and beyond the British jurisdiction It was accordingly decided that the claimant had not made out his claim !

The prerogative of the king to direct the education Education of his grandchildren, which had been established in Churlotte. 1718, was again asserted in 1804. The king claimed 1804. the guardianship of the Princess Charlotte, and the Prince of Wales, her father, being perplexed with divided councils, was long in doubt whether he should concede or contest the right 2 At length he appears to have agreed that the king should have the direction of the princess's education. The understanding not being very precise, a misapprehension arose as to its conditions, and it was said that the prince had withdrawn from his engagement 3 But Mr Pitt ultimately airanged this difference by obtaining the removal of the princess to Windsor, without excluding the prince from a share in the control of her education 4

1 Clark and Finnelly's Reports, and Mrs Fox act conspicuous parts, x1 85-154

<sup>2</sup> Lord Malmesbury says "The two factions pulled the prince different ways, Ladies Mona, Hutchin-son, and Mis Fitzherbert, were for his ceding the child to the king, the Duke of Clarence and Devonshine House most violent against it. and the prince ever inclines to the and Cab faction he saw last. In the Devon- 389, 391 shire House Cabal, Lady Melbourne so that the alternative for our future queen seems to be whether Mrs Fox or Mrs Frizherbort shall have the ascendency "— Malm Diar ry

3 Letters of Mr T Grenville to the Marquess of Buckinghum, Nov. 26th, Dec 1st and 11th, 1804, Com t and Cab of Geo III in 372, 385,

4 Ibid 395, 398

CHAP V

THE HOUSE OF LORDS —CONSTANT ADDITIONS TO ITS NUMBERS —PROFUSE CHLATORS IN THE REIGN OF GEORGE LIL AND SINCE —EPPERSENTATIVE PERSON SOUTLAND AND HILLEADD —REPRESENTATIVE CHLARGE TO SOUTLAND AND HILLEADD —PROFUSENTATIVE CHLARGE —LIFE PERSONS —THE BELIEFS —POLITICAL POSITION OF THE HOUSE OF LORDS —THE EPILAGEMENT A SOURCE OF POWER —THREATENED CREATION OF PERSON TO CARRY THE REJORM BILL —THE AUSTOCRACT, AND CLASSES ASSOCIATED WITH 15

Permanence of British institutions Nothing in the history of our constitution is more remarkable than the perinanence of every institution forming part of the Govennment of the country, while undergoing continual, and often extraordinary changes in its powers, privileges, and influence. The Crown, as we have seen, remains with all its prerogatives undiminished, and with its sources of influence increased, yet in the exercise of its great powers by responsible numisters, it has been gradually controlled by Parhament and public opinion, until the authority of the Crown in government and legislation, bears as little resemblance to the sway of the Tudor and Stuart kings, as to that of Lows XIV.

The Measter So also the House of Lods continues to hold its high place in the state, next to the Crown, and still enjoys the greater part of its ancient privileges. Yet no mentium on the milluence, it is difficult to recognise its identity with the "Great Council" of a former age But the changes which it has undergone have served to bring this great institution into harmony with other parts of the constitution, and with the social condition of the people, upon which time has worked equal mutations

The continual additions which have been made to Constant the number of temporal peers, sitting in Parha- to its numment, have been so remarkable as to change the best very constitution and character of the House of Lords. No more than twenty-nine temporal peers received writs of summons to the first Parliament of Henry VII, and this number had increased at the death of Queen Elizabeth to fifty-mine The Stuarts were mofuse in their creations 1, and raised the number of the peerage to about one hundred and fifty2, which William III and Queen Anne further increased to one hundred and sixty-eight. In the latter reign no less than twelve peers were created at once, to turn a majority in favour of the court, which they did on the very day of their introduction 8 In this Represensame reign were also added, on the Union with Scot- of Scotland, sixteen representative peers.—a number scarcely land adequate to represent an ancient peerage, little less numerous than that of England 4, in a House of

James I created sixty-two, 1696, the total number of temporal Charles I, fifty-nine, Charles II, peers, exclusive of minors, Roman sixty-four, and James II, eight, being a total number of one hun- one hundred and forty -Macaulay's died and ninety-three, but during Hist, iv 753 these leigns ninety-nine peesages became extinct, and thus the total addition to the peerage was nmety-four From returns delivered to the House of Lords m 1719 As many of these peerages were sold by James I and Charles II , it is suiprising that the creations were not even more numerous

<sup>2</sup> In 1661, one hundred and thii- franchised ty-nine lords were summoned In

Catholics, and non-puois, was about

<sup>5</sup> 2nd January, 1711 Lords' Journ xix 353 Somerville's Queen Anne, 460 Smollett's Hist n 224 4 There were one hundred and fifty-four Scottish peers at the time of the Union Tho roll is printed in Lords' Journ xviii 458 Lord Havereham said upwards of one hundred peers would be dis-

Lords, in which sat twenty-six bishops to make laws for Presbyterian Scotland. But if some nijustice was then done to the Scottish peerage, it has since been amply reducesed, as will be seen hereafter

The Peerage Bill of 1719

This rapid increase of the peerage had been regarded with much jealousy by that privileged body, whose individual dignity and power were proportionately diminished Early in the reign of George I, several new creations further aroused the apprehensions of the peers, and, in 1719, partly to gratify their lordships, - but more, perhaps, to further party objects 1, - a bill was brought into the House of Lords by the Duke of Somerset, proposing an extraordinary limitation of the loyal pierogative,-to which the king himself was induced to signify his consent. The Crown was to be restrained from the creation of more than six beyond the existing number of one hundred and seventy-eight peerages,-the power being still reserved of creating a new peerage whenever a peerage should become extinct, and instead of sixteen representative peers of Scotland, it was proposed that twenty-five hereditary peers should have seats in the House of, Loids This bill soon reached a third reading, but not until it had raised so much dissatisfaction in the House of Commons and the country, that its promoters thought it prudent to abandon it 2 In the next session, however, another bill was introduced, by the Duke of Buckingham, and sent down to the Commons, where, after an effectual exposure of its unconstitutional character, -especially by Sn Richard Steele, and Sn Robert Walpole, - it was rejected by a majority of two hundred and sixty-nine

&lt;sup>1</sup> The Prince of Wales was supposed not to be fixedly to the Whig to the bill party than in power, which was said <sup>2</sup> Parl Hist vii 589—594 to be the reason why Loid Sunder- Coxe's Lafe of Walpole, 1 116

voices, against one hundred and seventy-seven 1 It was, in truth, an audacious attempt to limit the pre-10gative of the Crown, and discourage the granting of just rewards to ment, for the sake of perpetuating a close aristocratic body,-independent of the Crown and mesponsible to the people

The first two kings of the House of Hanover con- Number of tinued to make additions to the peerage, which on the ting in accession of George III amounted to one hundred and Pulsment 1760 seventy-four Of this number, thurteen minors, and twelve Roman Catholics were incapable of sitting and voting in Parliament 2

Great as had been the additions to the peerage since Profuse the reign of Queen Ehzabeth, they were destined to be creations in tar exceeded in this and succeeding reigns The crea- Goorge III. tion of peers, having become an expedient for increasing the influence of the Crown, and the strength of parties, was freely resorted to by successive ministers. In the first ten years of this reign forty-two peers were created, or raised to a higher order in the peerage 8

Lord North was liberal in the creation of peers, with Creations a view to strengthen his own position, and carry out North the policy of the court In 1776, before the continued arrears of the Civil List were again brought before Parliament, ten new peers were created, one baron was raised to the dignity of a viscount, and three were promoted to earldoms 4 During his administration, he created or promoted about thuty Butish peers 5 In Ireland, he

1760 Beatson's Political Index, 1 133

4 Lord North's Administration, 5 Beatson's Political Index, 1 137

<sup>1</sup> Parl Hist vii 606—627 Cove's opposed it in "The Plebeian," while afte of Walpole, 1 117—125, ii 551. Addison waimly supported it in the Old Whig" Lafe of Walpole, 1 117-125, n 551, Sn Robert Walpole also opposed the measure in a pamphlet entitled,
"The Thoughts of a Member of the Lower House in iolation to a project for restraining and limiting the 4 power of the Crown in the future 257 ciention of Peeis," Steelo likewise

<sup>2</sup> Court and City Register for distributed honours still more liberally In 1777 he created eighteen barons, and raised seven barons and five viscounts to higher dignities in the peerage

Creations by Mr Pitt

Mr Pitt dispensed honours with greater profusion than any former mimster During the first five years of his administration, he had created nearly fifty peers 1 The influence he had himself derived from thus gratifying his supporters, suggested to him the precaution of restricting the regent in the exercise of this prerogative This estriction he proposed to extend to the entire period of the regency, which, however, he trusted would be of short duration Having created peers to consolidate his own power, he was unwilling to leave the same instrument in the hands of his opponents. Had his proposal taken effect, such a restraint,-extending over the whole regency,-was open to many of the objections which are admitted to apply to the more extensive limitation contemplated in 1719 It was said by Mi Pitt that the exercise of the prerogative was required to neward ment, to recruit the peerage from the great landowners and other opulent classes, and to render the Crown independent of factious combinations amongst the existing peers 2 All these grounds were as applicable to the regency as to any other time, while the fact of a powerful minister having recently made so large an addition to the House of Lords from his own party, was the strongest argument against the proposed restriction. To the up the hands of the regent, was to perpetuate the power of the minister condition was afterwards imposed upon the regent in

Restric tion proposed upon the Regent, ın 1789

Restriction during the regency of 1811

<sup>1</sup> In the debates upon the Regency, All Fox said forty-two, and M 1780, as so imperfectly reported, that Sherdan forty-eight From Beath-ins reasoning can only be gathered son's Political Index (1 140,) the lat-form the context of the debate, in ter statement appears to be strictly which his observations are adverted accurate Parl Hist xxvn 967, &c to

1810, but, being limited to one year, was exposed to less objection

In 1792, when Mr. Pitt had been eight years in continued power, he had created between sixty and seventy peers1, ereations by Mr Pitt the greater part of whom owed their elevation to the parliamentary support which they had themselves given to the minister, or to their interest in returning members to the House of Commons. He created and promoted no less than thirty-five peers, within the space of two years, m 1796 and 1797 2 And, m 1801, he had created or promoted, during the seventeen years of his administration, upwards of one hundred and forty peers, sitting by hereditary right 9 He also introduced as members of that body in 1801, the Irish representative peers and bishops The peerage of Lieland, on the union of that country, Removenwas dealt with, in some measure, upon different prin- tative peers ciples from that of Scotland The principle of representation was followed, twenty-eight representative peers being admitted to seats in the Pailiament of the United Kingdom But they were elected, not for the Parliament only, as in Scotland, but for life Again, no Scottish ocers could be created after the Union, but the peerage of Scotland was perpetuated, as an ancient and exclusive anistocracy It was otherwise with Ireland It was admitted that the peerage of that country was too numerous, and ought gradually to be diminished. and with this view, the royal prerogative was so far re-hamentary Reform, April 30th,1792 many " Parl Hist xxix 1494 Mi Courtenay, speaking in 1792, The number of creations and prosaid "It had been a matter of complaint that twenty-eight poers had four Beatson's Political Index, been made in the leign of George I, 1 144 which, it was aigued, would destroy the balanco of power in the other branches of the constitution" But 149, et seg

1 Mr Sheridan's speech on Par- Pitt "had created three times as motions appears to have been sixty-

<sup>2</sup> Beatson's PoliticalIndex, 1 147 <sup>3</sup> Beatson's Political Index, 1

stricted, that one Irish peer only can be created, whenever three Irish peerages, -in existence at the time of the Union,-have become extinct But the object of this provision being ultimately to reduce the number of Irish peers, - not having hereditary seats in Parliament,-to one hundred, it was also provided that when such reduction had been effected, one new Itish peetage may be created as often as a peerage becomes extinct, or as often as an Irish peer becomes entitled by descent or creation, to a peerage of the United Kingdom

Permission to Irish peers to sit in the House of Commons

Another peculiar ariangement, made on the Union of Ireland, was the permission granted to Irish peers of sitting in the House of Commons for any place in Great Butain,-a puvilege of which they have extensively availed themselves 1

Irish reprusentative bishops

At the same time, an addition of four lords spiritual was made to the House of Lords, to represent the eniscopal body of Ireland, and to sit by rotation of sessions. of whom an archbishop of the Church in Lieland is always to be one At the Union there were twenty bishoprics and archbishoprics of the Church in Ireland, but provision was made in 1833, by the Church Temporalities Act, for the reduction of that number to ten 2

Peernges of the United Kıngdom

Since the Union, further additions have continually been made to the peerage of the United Kingdom, to places in Ireland, as well as Great Britam In "A Letter to the Earl of Listowel, M P for St Alban's, by a 'Joint of the Tail,'" 1841, the posi-tion of his lordship as a peer of Ireland and a member of the House of Commons, was thus adverted to "A peer, and in your own rightand yet a peer without rights! Possessor of a name, of a dignity having no better reslity than in a dule B

1 By the Reform Bill of 1860, it sound . True, you are at this was proposed to extend this privilege moment a legislator, but by no right of buth, and only as a commonen, and, again, as representative for an English town, not for one in Iroland However great your stake in that country, you could not, though fifty places were held open for you, accept one, your maniowless dignity gliding ghost-like in, to forbid tho proflered seat " 2 3 & 4 Will IV c 37, scheand an analysis of the existing peerage presents summary some singular results In 1860, the House of Lords tons consisted of four hundred and sixty lords, spiritual and temporal The number of hereditary peers of the United Kingdom, had usen to three hundred and eighty-five, exclusive of the peers of the blood royal Of these peciages, one hundred and twenty-eight were created, in the lone reion of George III 1, forty-two in the reign of George IV2, and one hundred and seventeen since the accession of William IV 3 Thus two hundred and eighty-seven peerages have been created, or raised to then mesent rank, since the accession of George III, or very nearly three-fourths of the entire number. But this increase is exhibited by the existing peerage alone,-notwithstanding the extinction or merger of numerous titles, in the interval. The actual number of creations during the reign of George III amounted to three hundred and eightyeight, or more than the entire present number of the peerage 4

<sup>1</sup> Viz. two dukes, thinteen man - twenty earls, six viscounts, eightyquesses, thuty-eight earls, eight vis- four barons counts, and sixty-seven barons

Statement showing the Number of Peeringes created within periods of Twenty Trats, from 1700 to 1821

ĺ	Dukes	Marquesses	Earls	Viscounts	Batons
Fiom 1700 to 1720 mc , 1721 to 1740 , 1741 to 1760 , 1761 to 1780 , 1761 to 1800 , 1801 to 1821	thusive 22 2 2 2 2 3 4 3 3	14 3 1 1 10 8	33 14 24 14 24 37	30 8 15 9 23 84	58 19 34 46 91 80

Total number of Peerages created, 667, of which 888 were created between 1761 and 1821

&lt;sup>4</sup> The following Table, prepared by the late Mr Puhnan, Charencieux King of Arms, was placed at my dreposal by the kindness of his 2 One duke, two manquesses, seven earls, three viscounts, twentynine basons 3 Two dukes, five marqueses, son

Antiquity of the peerage No more than ninety-eight of the existing peerages claim an earlier creation than the reign of George III, but this fact is an imperfect criterion of the antiquity of the peerage. When the possessor of an ancient dignity is promoted to a higher grade in the peerage, his lesser dignity becomes merged in the greater, but more recent title. An earl of the fifteenth century, is transformed into a marquess of the nineteenth Many of the families from which existing peers are descended, are of great antiquity, and were noble before their admission to the peerage. Nor must the ancient noblity of the Scottish peerage be forgotten in the persons of those light-boin men, who now figure on the foll, as peers of the United Kingdom, of comparatively recent creation

Numerous claims to beerages

Great as this increase of peerages has been, it has borne no proportion to the demands made upon the favour of the Crown We find in Lord Malmesbury's Diary for 1807 this entry - "Lord Whitworth and Mi Heathcote (Sir William's son) urged me to apply for peerages I told them truly, there were no less than fifty-three candidates for peerage, and to none of which the king would listen,"1 And every minister since that time, has probably been obliged to resist the solicitations of not less than ten earnest claimants, for every peerage which he has advised the Crown to bestow When Lord Ghey was contemplating the creation of nearly one hundred peers in 1832, there was no lack of candidates, although the occasion was neither flattering to then self-esteem, not free from offensive imputations And, more recently, another minister discovered, in a single year, that upwards of thirty of his supporters were ambitious of the peerage, as an acknowledgment of then friendship towards himself, and devotion to his party

With this large increase of numbers, the peerage has Changes in undergone further changes, no less remarkable, in its the companion of character and composition It is no longer a council of the magnates of the land, - the territorial aristociacy, the descendants or representatives of the barons of the olden time, but in each successive age, it has assumed a more popular and representative character. Men who have attained the first eminence in war and diplomacy, at the bar or in the senate,-men wisest in council, and most eloquent in debate,-have taken then place in its distinguished soll, and then historic names represent the glories of the age from which they sprung Men who have amassed fortunes in commerce, or whose ancestors have enriched themselves by then own industry, have also been admitted to the privileged circle of the peerage Men of the highest intellects, achievements, and wealth, the peerage has adopted and appropriated to itself, men of secondary

A body so constantly changed, and recruited from Tts 18779. all classes of society, loses much of its distinctive hereditary character Peers sitting in Parliament by viitue of an hereditary right, share their privilege with so many, who by personal pretensions have recently been placed beside them, that the hereditary principle becomes divested of exclusive power, and invidious distinction pretensions, it has still left to the people

At the same time, the principle of representation has Extension been largely introduced into the constitution of the of the legicoscita-House of Lords The sixteen representative peers of two prin-Scotland, elected only for a Parliament, the twentyeight representative peers of Lieland, elected for life, and the four Irish representative bishops,-form a body as numerous as the entire pecrage in the time of Hemy VIII. And when to these are added the twenty-six English bishops, holding their seats for life. - the total number of Lords not sitting by virtue of hereditary right, becomes a considerable element in the constitution of the Upper House 1

Disproportion hetu con hereditary and representatise noess

In analysing these numbers, however, the growing disproportion between the representative lords, and the hereditary peers cannot fail to be apparent If sixteen Scottish peers were deemed an madequate representation of the ancient peerage of Scotland in the reign of Anne.-what are they now, when the peerage of the United Kingdom has been trebled in numbers? But this inequality, apparently excessive, - has been cornected by the admission of Scottish peers to hereditary seats in the British House of Lords At the present time the total number of Scottish peers amounts to seventy-eight2, of whom no less than forty,-or more than half,-sit in Pailiament by virtue of British peerages, created in their favour since the Union

Scottish neets cretterl peers of Great Butain

Then right to sit denied.

Great was the jealousy with which the House of Loids at first regarded the admission of Scottish peers to the peerage of Great Britain In 1711, the Duke of Hamilton was created Duke of Brandon, of the peerage of Great Britain when the lords declared, by a majority of five, that no patent of honour granted to any peer of Great Britain who was a peer of Scotland at the time of the Umon, entitled such peer to sit and vote in Parliament, or to sit upon the trial of peers.3

1 There are seventy-four loads of Duke of Rothesay, 3 Loids' Journ xix, 346, Peere right

These are also two penesses, and the Prince of Wales, who is and the Prince of Wales, who is Anne, 549.

Parliament not sitting by hereditary

The undoubted prerogative of the queen was thus boldly set aside for a time, by an adverse determination of the House of Lords

At the time of this decision, the Duke of Queens- Rights of berry was sitting by virtue of a British peerage, created Scottish since the Union The determination of the Lords pre-mitted vented, for many years, the direct admission of any other Scottish peers to the peerage of Great Britain, but this restriction was cleverly evaded by frequent creations of then eldest sons, who, having obtained seats in the House of Lords, succeeded, on the death of their fithers, to then Scottish peciages.1 At length, in 1782, the question of the disability of Scottish peers to receive patents of peerage in Great Britain, was referred to the judges, who were unanimously of opinion that no such disability had ever been created by the Act of Umon The lords, therefore, reversed the decision of 1711, and henceforth Scottish neers were freely admitted to the ranks of the British peerage 2

In 1787, another important question arose, affecting When Brithe rights of the Scottish peerage It had been the tish peers, plam intention of the Act of Union, that the peers of us pecis of Scotland, who were denied a seat in the Parliament of conse Great Butain, should be entitled to representation by members of their own body, subject to the same political conditions as themselves. The right of the Crown to admit Scottish peers to the peerage of Great Britain having at length been recognised, the king exercised the right in favour of the Earl of Abercorn and the Duke of Queensberry,-both of whom were sittang, at that time, in the House of Lords, as representative neers of Scotland That these noblemen, who now sat by hereditary right, should continue to be the representatives of the Scottish peerage, was a constitutional anomaly which could not easily be maintained As well might it have been contended that a member of the Lower House continued to represent the constituents by whom he had been elected, notwithstanding his elevation to a seat in the House of Peers In 1736, indeed, the Duke of Athol had inherited the Baiony of Strange, and had continued to sit as a representative peer, without any decision of the House of Loids, or any question being raised concerning his legal position But now Lord Stormont brought the matter before the House of Lords, in a clear and unansweiable argument, and though he was boldly opposed by Lord Thurlow, the House resolved that the Earl of Lauderdale and the Duke of Queensberry had ceased to sit as representatives of the peerage of $cotland 1

<sup>1</sup> Walpole's Mem. of Geo. III, <sup>2</sup> 6th Jun xxxvi 517. 2 6th June, 1782, Lords' Journ n. 412.

The two peers thus disqualified from sitting as representatives, immediately proceeded to vote as Scotisshpeels for their successors, in contravention of a resolution of the House of Lords in 1708. An attempt was 'made to defend their right to vote, and to cast doubts upon the former determination of the House, but the lords were resolute in maintaining the independent rights of the Scottish peerage, according to the spirit of the Act of Umon, and directed a copy of the resolution of the 21st of Jan 1708-9 to be transmitted to the Lord Registral of Scotland, with an "injunction to him that he do conform thereto," and since that time this decision has been invariably respected?

&lt;sup>1</sup> Loids Journ xxxvii 594, Pail. <sup>2</sup> Pail Hist xxvi 1158 (May Hist xxvi 596 18th, 1787), Lords Journ xxxvii. 709.

Meanwhile, the admission of Scottish peers to here- Present ditary seats in the House of Lords, is tending to a the Scottish singular result At no distant period, the Scottish Period peerage will probably become absorbed in that of the United Kingdom One half their number have already been absorbed more may hereafter be admitted to the House of Lords, and, as no new creations can be made, we may foresee the ultimate extinction of all but sixteen Scottish peers, not embraced in the British peerage These sixteen peers, instead of continuing a system of self-election, will then probably be created hereditary peers of Parliament The Act of Umon will have worked itself out, and a Parliamentary incorporation of the two countries will be consummated,-more complete than any which the most sangume promoters of the Union could, in their visions of the future, have foreshadowed

A similar absorption of the Lish peerage into the Present peerage of the United Kingdom has also been observable, though, by the terms of the Act of Union, the full perage number of one hundred Irish peers will continue to be maintained In 1860 there were one hundred and ninetythree Irish peers1, of whom seventy-one had seats in Parliament, as peers of the United Kingdom Thus, the peers of Ireland sitting in Parliament,-including the representative peers, - amounted to ninety-nine

By this fusion of the pecrages of the three kingdoms, Fusion of the House of Lords has grown at once more national, the perand more representative in its character As different three kingclasses of society have become represented there, so different nationalities have also acquired a wider representation. Nor ought it to be overlooked that Scotland and

There is also one peeress, and Armagh in the peerage of Ireland. the King of Hanovei is Earl of VOT. T

Ireland are further represented in the House of Lords by the numerous commoners, of Scottash and Irish birth, who have been raised to the dignity of the peerage for distinguished services, or other emment qualifications

Hereditary character of the peeringe

But all temporal peers,—whether English, Scottish, or Lish, and whether sitting by hereditary right or by election,—have been ennobled in blood, and transmit then dignities to their heis. Hereditary descent has been the characteristic of the peerage, and—with the exception of the bishops—of the constitution of the House of Lodds.

Defects in the appellate juisdiction of the Lords

In 1856, however, Her Majesty was advised to introduce among the hereditary peers of the realm, a new class of peers, created for life only Well-founded complaints had been made of the manner in which the appellate junisdiction of the House of Lords had been exercised The highest court of appeal was often without judges, their place being filled by peers unlearned in the law, who sat as members of the court, without affecting to participate in its judgments. This had been an evil of long standing, though it had not, until lately. aroused the vigilance of sintors and the public For some years after the Revolution, there had not been a single law-lord in the House, - Lord Somers having heard appeals as Lord Keeper When that distinguished lawyer was at length admitted to a seat in the House of Peers, he was the only law-lord During the greater part of the reigns of George II and George III , appeals had been heard by Lord Hardwicke, Lord Mansfield, Lord Thurlow, and Lord Eldon, sitting in judicial solitude,-while two mute, unlearned loads were to be seen in the background, representing the collective wisdom of the count In later times a more decorous performance of judicial duties had been exacted by public opinion, and frequent changes of administration having multiplied ex-chancellors, the number of law-lords was greater than at former periods But in an age in which reforms in the administration of justice had become an important department of legislation, and a subject of popular interest, theoretical improvements, at least, were demanded in the constitution of the first court of appeal As an expedient for adding to the judicial strength of Lafe-poor-the House, without a permanent increase of its numbers. again it was suggested that the most emment judges might be admitted to the privilege of sitting there, for life only The practice of granting pecrages for life was not a constitutional novelty, but had long fallen into desuctude Between the leigns of Richard II and Henry VI. several precedents were to be found of the creation of life-peerages Some of these, however, liad been made,like many other peerages of that period,-in full Parhament · some had been granted to peers already entitled to sit in Parliament by hereditary right some peers so created had never sat in the House of Peers one had been a foreigner, who could not claim a seat by virtue of his title and, for upwards of four hundred years, there was no instance on record, in which any man had been admitted to a seat in the House of Lords, as a peer for hie But there were many later instances, Life-pearin which ladies had received life-peerages Charles II. ages to had created the beautiful Louise de Querouaille. Duchess of Portsmouth for life, James II had created Catherine Sedley a baroness, by the same tenure, George I had raised Madame de Schulemberg to the rank of Duchess of Kendal for life, and had conferred a life-peerage

Walmoden Countess of Yarmouth for life

upon her mece 1, and George II. had made Madame <sup>1</sup> Or reputed daughter, the Countess of Walsingham

the reign of James I and that of George II, peerages for life had been granted to no less than eighteen ladies But as the fair sex are unable to sit in Parliament, this class of peerages could not be relied upon, in support of the right of the Crown to introduce life-peers

Peninges with re m unders mto the House of Lords There was, however, another class of peerages, whence a strong argument was derived in favour of the royal pierogative Though peerages in their general character have been hereditary,—descending like estates to the elder son, -yet peerages have been continually granted to persons, with remainder to collateral relatives, or to the elder son of the peer by a second wife, or to the son of a younger brother, or other relative not in the direct line of succession, as heir at law All grants of this class -being governed, not by the general law of descent, but by the special limitations in the patent - were exceptions from the principle of hereditary succession. The first grantee was, in effect, created a peer for life, though the second grantee became entitled to the peerage, subsect to the ordinary rights of succession But the grant of a peerage of this class was plainly distinguishable from a peerage for life, as it provided—though in an exceptional manner-for the duration of the dignity beyond the life of the first grantee It was indeed maintained that such peerages afforded further evidence against the legality of life-peerages, as they had been constantly granted, without objection, while none of the latter had been ereated for centuries

Anthorities

But if these precedents and analogies were obm support of the peer solete, or of doubtful application, the legality of bie-peerages had been recognised by nearly all constitutional authorities. Lord Coke had repeatedly affirmed the doctrine, that the Crown may create peerages "for hfe, in tail, or in fee," the leained Selden had referred to the ancient custom without comment. Chief Baron Comvns and Crinse had accepted the authority of Coke as unquestioned law, the popular Blackstone had repeated and enforced it', and, lastly, Lord Redesdale's commttee "On the dignity of a Peer," in 1822, had acknowledged it without reserve 2 Butler was the only emment writer who had expressed any doubt upon the subject 8 The doctrine had also been generally received among statesmen as well as lawyers Lord Liverpool's administration, impressed with the necessity of improving the appellate jurisdiction of the Lords, had, at one time, unammously resolved to create life-peers In 1851, the government of Lord John Russell had offered a lifepeerage to Dr Lushington, the distinguished judge of the Adminalty Court, who, by a late statute, had been demed the privilege of sitting in the House of Commons In the Devon peerage case, Lord Brougham had stated from the woolsack, as Chancellor, that the Crown had not only the power of creating a peerage for the life of the grantec lunself, but for the life of another person, and upon a more recent occasion, Lord Campbell had laid it down in debate, that the "Crown might create, by its picrogative, a peciage for life, but not a peciage during a man's continuance in office that would require an enactment of the three branches of the legislature "4

<sup>1 &</sup>quot;For a man or woman may be exceeded noble for their own lives, and the dignity not descend to their leits at all, or descend only to some particular hens, as whore a pecuage is limited to a man and the hens male of his body, by Ehrabeth, his present lady, and not to such hens

<sup>1 &</sup>quot;For a man or woman may be by any former or future wife" cated noble for their own lives. Steph Blackstone, ii 589

<sup>2 3</sup>rd Rop 37, 38
5 Coke's Inst, 19th edit, by Hangarve and Butler
4 Hansard's Debates, June 27th, 1851, 3rd Source, cvvn 1312

The Wensleydale peerage

Relying upon these precedents and authorities, the manisters advised her Majesty, before the meeting of Parliament in 1856, to issue letters patent to Su James Paike, lately an eminent baron of the Court of Exchequer, creating him Baron Wensleydale for life. The letters patent were issued, but the peers loudly protested against the intrusion of a life-peer to sit amongst the hereditary nobles of the realm. An unitimely fit of the gout disabled Lord Wensleydale from presenting himself, with his writ of summons, on the flist day of the session, and on the 7th of February Lord Lyndhurst proposed, in a missterly speech, to refer his exceptional patent to the Committee of Firvileres

Arguments for and against it

Throughout the learned debate which followed, the abstract prerogative of the Crown to create a hiepeerage was scarcely questioned, but it was denied that such a peerage conferred any right to sit in Parhament It was treated as a mere title of honour. giving lank and piecedence to its possessoi, but not a place in an hereditary legislative chamber. The precedents and authorities in support of life-pecrages were exposed to a searching criticism, which failed, however, to shake the position that the Crown had, in former times, introduced life-peers to sit in the House of Lords. But it was admitted on all sides, that no such case had occurred for upwards of four hundred years Hence arose a most difficult question of constitutional law Had the ancient prerogative of the Crown been lost by desuetude: or could it be exercised, if the Queen thought fit to revive it? The ministers, relying upon the legal maxim, "nullum tempus occurrit regi," argued that there could be no loss of prerogative by lapse of time But their opponents forcibly contended that the Crown could not alter the settled constitution of the realm ancient times,-before the institutions of the country had been established by law and usage, -the Crown had withheld writs of summons from peers who were unducstionably entitled, by inheritance, to sit in Parliament the Crown had disfranchised ancient boroughs by prerogative, and had enfianchised new boroughs by royal charter What would now be said of such an exercise of the prelogative? By constitutional usage, having the force of law, the House of Lords had been for centurnes a chamber consisting of hereditary councillors of the Crown, while the House of Commons had been elected by the suffiages of legally qualified electors The Crown could no more change the constitution of the House of Lords by admitting a life-peer to a seat in Parliament, than it could change the representation of the people, by issuing writs to Birkenhead and Stalevbridge, or by lowering the franchise of electors

Passing beyond the legal nights of the Crown, the · opponents of life-peerages dilated upon the hazardous consequences of admitting this new class of peers Was it probable that such peerages would be confined to law-lords? If once recognised, would they not be extended to all persons whom the ministers of the day might think it convenient to obtinde upon the House of Lords? Might not the hereditary peers be suddenly overpowered by creatures of the executive government. -not ennobled on account of their public services, or other claims to the favour of the Crown, but appointed as nominees of ministers, and ready to do their bidding? Nay! might not the Crown be hereafter advised to discontinue the giant of hereditary peerages altogether, and gradually change the constitution of the House of Lords from an hereditary assembly, to a dependent senate nominated for life only? Nor were there wanting eloquent reflections upon the future degradation of distinguished men, whose services would be rewarded by life-peerages instead of by those cherished honours, which other men—not more worthy than themselves—had enjoyed the privilege of transmitting to their children. Sitting as an unferior caste, among those whom they could not all their peers, they would have reason to deplote a needless innovation, which had demed them honours to which they were justify entitled

Decision of the Lords

Such were the arguments by which Lord Wensley-dale's patent was assailed They were ably combated by ministers, and it was even contended that without a reference from the Crown, the Lord's had no right to adjudicate upon the right of a peer to sit and vote in their House, but, on a division, the patent was referred to the Committee of Pirvleges by a majority of thirty-three! After an inquiry into the precedents, and more learned and ingenious debates, the committee reported, and the House age sed, "that mather the letters patent, nor the letters patent with the usual writ of summons issued in pursuance thereof, can entitle the grantee to sit and vote in Parliament."

Some hereditary peers, who concurred in this conclusion, may have been animated by the same spirit of fealousy which, in 1711, had led their ancestors to deny the light of the Crown to admit Scottish peers amongst them, and in 1719 had favoured a more extensive limitation of the royal prerogative, but with the exception of the Lord Chaneellor,—by whose advice the pattent had been made out,—all the law-lords of both patters supported the resolution, which has since been generally accepted as a sound exposition of constitutional law Where institutions are founded upon ancient usage, it is a safe and wholesome doctime that they shall not be changed, unless by the supreme legislative authority of Parliament The Crown was forced to submit to the decision of the Lords, and Lord Wenslevdale soon afterwards took his seat, under a new patent, as an hereditary peer of the realm

Content, 138, not content, 105 Hansard's Dobates, 31d Ser, cvl

&lt;sup>2</sup> Ibid, 1152 et seq, Report of Committee of Pivrieges, Clark's House of Loads' Cases, v. 958

But the question of life-peerages was not immediately Further set at rest A committee of the Lords having been incommended appointed to inquire into the appellate jurisduction of lation to life-period. that House, recommended that her Majesty should be ages empowered, by statute, to confer life-peerages upon two persons who had served for five years as judges, and that they should sit with the Lord Chancellor as judges of appeal and "deputy speakers" A bill, founded upon this recommendation, was passed by the House of Lords, but after much discussion, it miscarried in the House of Commons 1

In reviewing the rapid growth of the temporal peers Lords sitting in Parliament, it is impossible not to be struck spinted with the altered proportions which they bear to the lords spiritual, as compared with former times Before the suppression of the monasteries by Henry VIII, in 1539, when the abbots and priors sat with the bishops, the lords spiritual actually exceeded the temporal lords in number First in rank and piecedence,- superior in attainments,- and exercising high trusts and extended influence, - they were certainly not inferior, in political weight, to the great nobles with whom they were associated Even when the abbots and priors had been removed, the bishops alone formed about one third of the House of Lords But while the temporal lords have been multiplied since that period about eight-fold, the Euglish bishops sitting in Parliament, have only been mer eased from twenty-one to twenty-six, -to whom have been added the four Irish bishops The ecclesiastical element in our legislature, has thus become relatively inconsiderable and subordinate. Instead of being a third of the House of Lords, as in former times, it now forms less than a fifteenth part of that assembly . nor is it likely to receive any accession of strength the pressing demands of the Church obtained from Parliament the constitution of the new bishoping of Manchester, care was taken that not even one spinitual lord should be added to the existme number principle of admitting a new bishop to sit in Pathament was, indeed, conceded, but he was allowed that privilege at the expense of the more ancient sees. Except in the case of the secs of Canterbury, York, London, Durham, and Winchester, the bishop last appointed receives no writ of summons from the Crown to sit in Parhament, until another vacancy arises 1 The principle of this temporary exclusion of the junior bishop. though at first exposed to objections on the part of the Church, has since been found to be not without its advantages It enables a bishop recently inducted, to devote himself without interruption to the labours of his diocese, while it relieves him from the expenses of a residence in London, at a time when they can be least conveniently borne.

Hansaid's Debates, 3rd Ser, exhi. 780, 899, 1059, Rad, exhii, 428, 583, 613.

Attempts to exclude bushous But, however small their numbers, and diminished their influence, the presence of the bishops in Parlin-

&lt;sup>1</sup> Bulaopric of Manchester Act, on the St Asaph and Bangor Dio-10 & 11 Vict c 108 See also Decesses' Bill, butes, 1844, un the House of Lords,

ment has often provoked opposition and remonstrance from the This has probably arisen, more from feelings to which House of enisconacy has been exposed, than from any dispassionate objections to the participation of bishops in the legislation of the country Proscribed by Presbyterian Scotland .- ejected from Parliament by the English Puritans 1.-repudiated in later times, by every sect of dissenters, -not regarded with too much favour, even by all the members of their own Church, -and obnoxious, from their dignity and outward pomp, to vulgar realousies. - the bishops have had to contend against many popular opinious and prejudices. Nor has their political conduct, generally, been such as to conciliate public favour Ordinarily supporting the government of the day, even in its least popular measures,-leaning always to authority,- as churchmen, opposed to change,- and precluded by their position, from courting popularity. - it is not surprising that erres have sometimes been raised against them, and efforts made to pull them down from their high places

In 1834, the Commons refused leave to bring in a bill "for relieving the bishops of their legislative and judicial duties in the House of Peers," by a majority of more than two to one 2 By a much greater majority. in 1836, they refused to affirm "that the attendance of the bishops in Parliament, is prejudicial to the cause of religion"8 And again in the following year, they denied, with equal emphasis, the proposition that the sitting of the bishous in Parliament " tends to alienate the affections of the people from the Established Church." 4 Since that time, there have been no adverse

 <sup>16</sup> Car I c 27
 20th April, 1896. Ayes, 53;
 18th March, 1834. Ayes, 58, Noes, 180
 16th February, 1887. Ayes, Noes, 125 92, Noes, 197, motions in Pailament, and few unfinedly criticisms elsewhere, in relation to the Parhamentary functions of the bishops

Circumstances farourable to the bishops

Their place in our venerable constitution has hitherto been upheld by every statesman, and by nearly all political parties At the same time, the liberal policy of the legislature towards Roman Catholics and Dissenters, has served to protect the bishops from much religious animosity, formerly directed against the Church, of which they are the most prominent representatives Again, the Church, by the zeal and earnestness with which, during the last thirty years, she has followed out her spiritual mission, has greatly extended her own moral influence among the people, and weakened the assaults of those who dissent from her doctrines And the increased strength of the Church has fortified the position of the bishops That they are an exception to the principle of hereditary light—the fixed characteristic of the House of Lords is, in the opinion of many, not without its theoretical advantages

Political position of the House of Lords

The various changes in the constitution of the House of Lords, which have here been briefly sketched, have considerably affected the political position and influence of that branch of the legislature

It is not surprising that peers of ancient lineage should have regarded with jealousy, the continual enlargement of their own privileged order. The proud distinction which they enjoyed lost some of its lustre, when shared by a larger body. Their social pre-emmence, and the waight of their individual votes in Parlament, were alkie impaired by the increasing number of those whom the favour of their sovereign had made equal to themselves. These effects, however, have been rendered much less extensive than might have been anticipated, by the expansion of society, and by the operation of party in all political affairs

But however the individual privileges of peers may its enhave been affected by the multiplication of their numhers, it is scarcely to be questioned that the House of of strength Lords has gained importance, as a political institution, by its enlargement Let us suppose, for a moment, that the jealousy of the peers had led either to such a legal restraint upon the prerogative, as that proposed in the luigh of George I, or to so sparing an exercise of it, that the peerage had remained without material increase since the accession of the House of Hanover Is it conceivable that an order so hunted in number, and so exclusive in character, could have maintained its due authority in the legislature 9 With the instinctive aversion to change, which characterises every close corporation, it would have opposed itself haughtily to the active and improving spirit of more popular institutions It might even have attempted to maintain some of its more invidious privileges, which have been suffered to fall into desuctude Hence it would necessarily have been found in opposition to the House of Commons, the press, and public opinion, while its limited and unpopular constitution would have failed to give it strength to resist the pressure of adverse forces But the wider and more liberal constitution which it has acquired from increased numbers, and a more representative character, has saved the House of Lords from these political dangers. True to the spirit of an aristocracy, and to its theoretical uses in the state, it has been slower than the House of Commons in receiving populas impressions. It has often checked, for a time, the progressive policy of the age, yet, being accessible to the same sympathies and influences as the other House, its tardier convictions have generally been brought, without violence, into harmony with public opimon And when measures, demanded by the national welfare, have sometimes been murrously retarded, the great and composite qualities of the House of Lords .the emmence of its numerous members,-their talents in debate, and wide local influence,-have made it too powerful to be sudely overborne by popular clamour

And stated stitutions

Thus the expansive growth of the House of Lords .popular in- concurring with the increased authority of the House of Commons, and the enlarged influence of the press,appears to have been necessary for the safe development of our fice institutions, in which the popular element has been continually advancing cause has also tended to render the peers more independent of the influence of the Crown To that influence they are naturally exposed but the larger their number, and the more various their interests. the less effectually can it be exercised. while the Crown is no longer able to secure their adherence by grants of land, offices, and pensions

The peer-age viewed in reference to party

These changes in the constitution of the House of Peers must further be considered in their relations to party. The general object which successive ministers have had in view in creating peers,-apart from the neward of special public services,-has been to favour then own adherents, and strengthen their Parliamentary interest It follows that the House of Lords has undergone considerable changes, from time to time, in its political composition This result has been the more remarkable whenever one party has enjoyed power for a great length of time. 'In such cases the number of creations has sometimes been sufficient to alter the balance of parties, or, if this cause alone has not sufficed, it has been aided by political conversions,-the not uncommon fruit of ministerial prosperity The votes of the bishops have also been usually recorded with that party, to whom they owed their elevation Hence it was Entire that, on the accession of George III,—when the domination of the great Whig families had lasted for nearly nections at half a century,—the House of Lords was mainly Whig pounds. Hence it was that, on the accession of William IV, when the Tory rule - commenced under Lord Bute, strengthened by Lord North, and consolidated by Mr Pitt—had enjoyed ascendency for even a longer period, the House of Lords was mainly Torv

Under such conditions as these, when a ministry, Dangel having established a sure majority in the House of Loids, cause of is overthrown by an Opposition commanding a majority collisions between of the House of Commons, the two Houses are obviously the Houses in danger of being brought into collision A dissolution may suddenly change the political character of the House of Commons, and transfer power from one party o to another, but a change in the political character of the House of Lords, may be the work of half a century. In the case of Whig administrations since the Reform Act, the creation of a majority in the Upper House, has been a matter of peculiar difficulty The natural sympathies of the peerage are conservative, and are strengthened by age, property, and connections A stanch Whig, raised to the Upper House, is often found a doubting, critical, fastidious partisan, - sometimes an absentee, and not unfrequently an opponent of his own party. No longer responsible to constituents for his votes, and removed from the liberal associations of a popular assembly, he gradually throws off his political allegiance; and if habit, or an affectation of consistency, still retain him upon the same side of the House, or upon the neutral "closs-benches," his son will probably be found an acknowledged member of the Opposition Party ties, without patronage, have been slack, and easily broken

The influence of the Crown fornucly able to reconcile

While the influence of the Crown was sufficiently great to direct the policy of the country, and while a large proportion of the members of the Lower House were the nominees of peers, collisions between the two Houses, if not wholly averted, were at least easily accommodated There had been frequent contests between them, upon matters of privilege It was not without protracted struggles, that the Commons had established their exclusive right to grant supplies and impose taxes. The two Houses had contended violently in 1675 concerning the appellate jurisdiction of the Lords , they had contended. with not less violence, in 1704, upon the jurisdiction of the Commons, in matters of election, they had quarrelled rudely, in 1770, while insisting upon the exclusion of strangers But upon general measures of public policy. their differences had been raie and unimportant George III, by inducing the Lords to reject Mr. Fox's India Bill, in order to overthrow the Coalition ministry, brought them into open collision with the Commons; but harmony was soon restored between them, as the Crown succeeded, by means of a dissolution, m obtaining a large majority in the Lower House In later times, the Lords opposed themselves to concessions to the Roman Catholics, and to amendments of the Cuminal Law, which had been approved by the Commons For several years, neither the Commons nor the people were sufficiently earnest, to enforce the adoption of those measures but when public opinion could no longer be resisted, the Loids avoided a collision with the Commons, by acquiescing in measures of which they still disapproved Since popular opinion has been more independently expressed by the Commons, the hazard of such collisions has been greatly increased The Commons, deriving their authority directly from the people, have increased in power, and the influences which formerly tended to bring them into haimony with the Lords, have been impaired

The memorable events of 1831 and 1832, arising out The Reof the measures for extending the representation of form Bill rethe people, exposed the authority of the House of jected by Lords to a rude shock, and even threatened its constitution with danger Never since the days of Cromwell, had that noble assembly known such perils. The Whig ministry having, by a dissolution, secured a large majority of the Commons in favour of their second Reform Bill, its rejection by the Lords was still certain, if the Opposition should put forth their strength For seventy years, the House of Lords had been recruited from the lanks of the Tory party, and was not less hostile to the Whie ministry, than to Parhamentary reform The people had so recently pronounced their judgment in favour of the Bill, at the late election, that it now became a question, - who should prevail, the Lords or the Commons? The answer could scarcely be doubtful The excited people, aroused by a great cause, and encouraged by bold and earnest leaders, were not likely to yield The Lords stood alone The king's ministers, the House of Commons, and the people were demanding that the Bill should pass Would the Lords venture to reject it? If they should bend to the msing storm, their will indeed would be subdued,-their independent judgment set aside . but public danger would be averted Should they brave the storm, and stand up against its fury, they could still be overcome by the royal pierogative

Already, before the second reading, no less than sixteen new peers had been created, in order to correct, in some measure, the notorious disproportion between the two parties in that house, but a majority was still known to be adverse to the Bill A further creation of peers, in order to ensure the success of the measure. was then in contemplation, but the large number that would be required for that purpose, the extreme harshness of such a course, and the hope -not ill-founded that many of the peers would yield to the peril of the times, discouraged ministers from vet advising this last resource of power. The result was singular The neers hesitated, waveled, and paused. Many of them, actuated by fear, by prudence, by policy, or by public sprit, refrained from voting But the bishops. -either less alarmed, or less sensible of the imminent danger of the occasion, - mustered in unusual force Twenty-two were present, of whom twentyone voted against the Bill. Had they supported mmisters, the Bill would have been saved but now they had exactly turned the scale,-as Lord Grey had warned them that they might, - and the Bill was lost by a majority of forty-one.

Ministers supported by the Commons The House of Commons immediately supported the ministers by a vote of confidence the people were more excited than ever, and the reformers more determined to prevail over the resistance of the House of Tonds.

Reform Bill of Parhament was prorogued merely for the purpose of introducing another Reform Bill. This Bill was welcomed by the Commons, with larger majorities than the last; and now the issue between the two Houses had become still more serious To "swamp the House of Londs" had, at length, become a popular cry, but at this time, not a single peer was created. Loud Grey, however, on the second reading, while he declared himself averse to such a proceeding, justified its use in case of necessity. The gravity of the crisis had shaken the courage of the majority. A considerable number of "waverers," as they were terned, now showed themselves, and the fate of the Bill was in their hands. Some who had been previously absent, including five bishops, voted for the Bill, others, who had voted against the former Bill, abstanced from voting, and seventeen who had voted against the last Bill, actually voted for this! From these various causes, the second is eading was carried by a majority of nine.

and the people, that the further progress of the measure was exposed to mmment danger; and while the former were contemplating, with reluctance and dread, the immediate necessity of a further creation of peers, the popular cry was iaised more loudly than ever, that the House of Lords must be "swamped" Such a cry was highly encouraged by reckless and in esponsible politicians, but the constitutional statesmen who had to conduct the country through this custs, weighed seriously a step

Meanwhile it was well known, both to the ministers The curses country through this crisis, weighed seriously a step which nothing but the peril of the times could justify Loid Brougham — perhaps the boldest of all the statesmen concerned in these events—has thus recorded his own sentiments regarding them —"When I went to Windsor with Lord Grey, I had a list of eighty creations fiamed upon the principles of making the least possible permanent addition to our House and to the austocracy, by calling up peens' closes sons,—by choosing men without any families,—by taking Scotch and Irish peers had a strong feeling of the necessity of the case, in the very peculiar circumstances we were placed in; but such was my deep sense of the dreadful consequences of the act, that I much question whether I should not have preferred running the risk of confusion that attended the loss of the Bill as it then stood.—rather than expose the constitution to so imminent a hazard of sub-

The ministers advise a creation of neers.

version "1 No sooner was the discussion of the Bill commenced in committee, than the ministers suddenly found themselves in a minority of thirty-five 2 Now, then, was the time, if ever, for exercising the royal prerogative, and accordingly the ministers unanimously resolved to advise the king to create a sufficient number of peers, to turn the scale in favour of the Bill, and in the event of his refusal, to tender their resignation He refused, and the resignation of the ministers was immediately tendered and accepted. In vain the Duke of Wellington attempted to form an administration on the basis of a more moderate measure of 1 eform the House of Commons and the people were firm in their support of the ministers, and nothing was left for the peers, but submission or coercion The king unwillingly gave his consent, in writing, to the necessary creation of peers8; but, in the meantime. - averse to an offensive act of authority. - he successfully exerted his personal influence with the peers. to induce them to desist from further opposition 4 The losophy, 111 308 The Butish Constitution, 1861, p 270 2 151 and 116 * "The king grants permission to Earl Grey, and to his chancellor,

Lord Brougham, to create such a number of peers as will be sufficient

<sup>1</sup> Lord Brougham's Political Phi- to ensure the passing of the Reform Bill,—first celling up peers' eldest sons William R Windsor, May 17th, 1832 "—Roebuck's Hist of the greater part of the Opposition peers absented themselves, and the memorable Reform Bill was soon passed through all its further stages The preiogative was not exercised, but its efficacy was not less signal in overcoming a dangerous resistance to the popular will, than if it had been fully exerted, while the House of Lords-humbled, indeed, and its influence shaken for a time-was spared the blow which had been threatened to its dignity and independence

Whig Ministry, n 881—888

See his Circular Letter, supra, p. 119, and infra, Chapter VI

At no period of our history, has any question arisen opinion of greater constitutional importance than this proposed of Welcreation of peers. The peers and the Tory party viewed hington it with consternation "If such projects," said the Duke of Wellington, "can be carried into execution by a numster of the Crown with impunity, there is no doubt that the constitution of this House, and of this country, is at an end. I ask, my loids, is there any one blind enough not to see that if a minister can with impunity advise his sovereign to such an unconstitutional exercise of his prelogative, as to thereby decide all questions in this House, there is absolutely an end put to the power and objects of deliberation in this House, and an end to all just and proper means of decision loids, my opinion is, that the threat of carrying this measure of creating peers into execution, if it should have the effect of inducing noble lords to absent themselves from the House, or to adopt any particular line of conduct, is just as bad as its execution, for, my loids. at does by violence force a decision on this House, and on a subject on which this House is not disposed to give such a decision "1

He was finely answered by Lord Grey "I ask what opmon of

would be the consequences if we were to suppose that Earl Grey

May 17th, 1832 Hausard's Debates, 3rd Ser., vii., 995

such a prerogative did not exist, or could not be constatutionally exercised? The Commons have a control over the power of the Crown, by the privilege, in extreme cases, of refusing the supplies, and the Crown has, by means of its power to dissolve the House of Commons, a control upon any violent and rash proceedings on the part of the Commons, but if a majority of this House is to have the power, whenever they please, of opposing the declared and decided wishes both of the Crown and the people, without any means of modifying that power, - then this country is placed entirely under the influence of an uncontrollable oligarchy that if a majority of this House should have the power of acting adversely to the Crown and the Commons, and was determined to exercise that power without being hable to check or control, the constitution is completely altered, and the government of this country is not a limited monarchy it is no longer, my lords, the Crown, the Lords and the Commons, but a House of Lords, - a separate obgarchy, - governing absolutely the others "1

A creation of peers equivalent to a dissolution

It must not be forgotten that, although Parlament is said to be dissolved, a dissolution extends, in fact, no further than to the Commons The peers are not affected by it—no change can take place in the constitution of then body, except as to a small number of Scotch representative peers. So far, therefore, as the House of Lords is concerned, a creation of peers by the Crown, on extraordinary occasions, is the only equivalent which the constitution has provided, for the change and renovation of the House of Commons by a dissolution. In oo other way can the opinions of the House of Lords be brought into harmony with those of the people

May 17th, 1832 Hansard's Debates, 3rd Ser, x11 1000.

In ordinary times the House of Lords has been converted gradually to the political opinions of the dominant party in the state, by successive creations, but when a crisis arises, in which the party, of whose sentiments it is the exponent, is opposed to the majority of the House of Commons and the country, it must either yield to the pressure of public opinion, or expose itself to the bazard of a more sudden conversion. Statesmen of all parties would condemn such a measure, except in cases of grave and perilous necessity, but, should the emergency be such as to demand it, it cannot be pronounced unconstitutional

It was apprehended that, by this moral coercion, the legitimate influence of the peers would be impaired, since and their independence placed at the mercy of any defeat popular minister, supported by a majority of the House To record the fiats of the Lower House. of Commons -sometimes, perhaps, with unavailing protests, -sometimes with feeble amendments,-would now be their humble office They were cast down from their high place in the legislature, - their ancient glones were departed Happily, these forebodings have not suice been justified. The peers had been placed, by their natural position, in opposition to a great popular cause . and had vielded, at last, to a force which they could no longer resist. Had they yielded eather, and with a better grace, they might have shared in the popular triumph Again and again the Commons had opposed themselves to the influence of the Crown, or to popular opinion, and had been overcome, vet their permanent influence was not impaired. And so was it now alike must bow to the popular will, when constitutionally expressed.

Then independence

The subsequent history of the Lords attests their undiminished influence since the Reform Act. That measure has unquestionably increased the authority of the House of Commons But the Lords have not shown themselves less independent in their judgment, or less free in their legislative action It had previously been then practice, not so much to originate legislation, and to duect the policy of the country, as to control, to amend, and to modify measures received from the Commons, and in that function, they have since laboured with as much freedom as ever and 1836, the Commons maintained that the principle of appropriating the surplus revenues of the Church of Ireland, was essential to the settlement of the question of Irish tithes Yet the Lords, by their determined resistance to this principle, obliged the Commons, and the ministers who had fought their way into office by its assertion, definitively to abandon it They exercised an unconstrained judgment in their amendments to the English Municipal Reform Bill, which the Commons were obliged reluctantly to accept. They dealt with the bills for the reform of the Irish corporations, with equal freedom. For four sessions their amendments, - wholly inconsistent with the principles of legislation asserted by the Commons, - led to the abandonment of those measures And at length they forced the Commons to accept amendments, repugnant to the policy for which they had been contending Again, they resisted, for several years, the removal of the Jewish disabilities, - a measure approved by the settled judement of the Commons and the people, and obliged the advocates of religious liberty to accept, at last, an unsatisfactory compromise But these examples of independence are thrown into the shade by their proceedings in 1860, when, -treading upon the forbidden ground of taxation, they rejected a Bill which the Commons had passed.—as part of the financial arrangements of the year,- for repealing the duties upon paper controverted question of privilege involved in this vote, will be touched upon hereafter 1, but here it may be said, that the Commons have ever been most jealous of then exclusive rights, in matters of simply and taxation, and that their jealousy has been wisely respected by the Lords But, finding a strong support in the Commons, - an indifferent and mert public opinion,- much encouragement from an influential portion of the press, and a favourable state of parties, -the Lords were able to defy at once the government and the Commons There had been tames, when such defiance would have been resented and returned; but now the Lords, rightly estimating their own strength, and the causes by which retahation on the part of the Commons was restrained, overruled the ministers of the Crown and the Commons, on a question of finance, and, by their single vote, continued a considerable tax upon the people The most zealous champion of the independence of the peers, in 1832, would not then have counselled so hazardous an enterprise Still less would be have predicted that it would be successfully accomplished. within thirty years after the passing of the Reform Act

In short, though the Lords were driven, in 1832, from an indefensible position, which they had held with too stubborn a persistence, they have since maintained their independence, and a proper weight in the legislature.

Chapter VII p 473

Vantageground of the Lords As a legislative body, the Lords have great facilities for estimating the direction and strength of public opinion. Nearly every measure has been fully discussed, before they are called upon to consider at Hence they are enabled to judge, at leisure, of its ments, its defects, and its popularity. If the people are indifferent to its merits, they can safely reject it altogether if too popular, in principle, to be so dealt with they may qualify, and perhaps neutralise it by amendments, without any shock to public feeling

At the same time they are able, by their debates, to exercise an extensive influence upon the convictions of the people. Stiring like a court of review upon measures originating in the Lower House, they can select from the whole amoury of debate and public discussion, the best arguments, and the most effective appeals to enlightened minds. Nor have there ever been wanting amongst their number, the first orators of their age and country

Small attendance of peers aficcts their political woight But with these means of influence, the political weight of the House of Peers has been much affected by the passive indifference which it ordinarily displays to the business of legislation. The constitution of that assembly, and the social position of its members, have failed to excite the spirit and activity which mark a representative body. This is constantly made apparent by the small number of peers, who attend its deliberations. Unless great party questions have been under discussion, the House has ordinarily presented the appearance of a select committee. Three peers may wield all the authority of the House. Nay, even less than that number are competent to pass or reject a law, if their unanimity should avert a division, or notice of their imperfect constitution. Many laws have, in fact, been passed by numbers befitting a committee, rather than the whole House 1 That the judgment of so small a number should be as much respected as that of the large bodies of members who throng the House of Commons, can scarcely be expected

A quorum of three, - though well suited for judicial business, and not wholly out of proportion to the entire number of its members, in the earlier periods of its listory, - has become palpably inadequate for a numerous assembly That its members are not accountable to constituents, adds to their moral responsibilities, and should suggest safeguards against the abuse of the great powers which the constitution has entirested to them

The indifference of the great body of the peers to Them inpublic business, and their scant attendance, by discouraging the efforts of the more able and ambitious men new amongst them, further impair the influence of the Upper House Statesmen who had distinguished theinselves in the House of Commons, have complained, again and again, of the cold apathy by which their earnest oratory has been checked in the more patrician assembly The encouragement of numbers, of ready sympathy, and of warm applause, are wanting, and the disheartened orator is fain to adapt his tone to the ungenial temperament of his audience Thus to discourage public spirit, and devotion to the great affairs of state, cannot fail to diminish the political influence of the House of Lords

The inertness of the House of Lords has produced Their mentary Junishchon Bill was read a third time by amajority of two ma house of twelve On the 26th August, house of twelve On the 26th August, and six a Land (Ireland) Bill, which had occu-

On April 7th, 1854, the Testa- pied weeks of discussion in the Com-deference to leaders another result prejudicial to its due influence in public affans It has generally yielded, with an indolent facility, to the domination of one or two of its own members, gifted with the strongest wills Lord Thuilow. Lord Eldon, the Duke of Wellmeton, and Lord Lyndhurst, have swaved it, at different times, almost with the power of a dictator Such men had acquired then activity and resolution in a different school from that of an hereditary chamber; and where neers by hereditary descent, like the Earl of Derby. have exercised an equal sway, they have learned how to lead and govern men, amidst the more sturing scenes of the House of Commons Every assembly must have its leaders, but the absolute suitender of its own sudgment to that of a single man. - perhaps of narrow mind, and unworthy prejudices,-cannot fail to impair its moral influence

The peaage in its social relaSuch, then, are the political position of the House of Lords, and the causes of its strength and weakness, as a part of the legislature. The pechage is also to be regarded in another aspect,—as the head of the great community of the upper classes. It represents their interests, feelings, and aspirations. Instead of being separated from other tanks in dignified isolation, it is connected with them by all the ties of social life. It leads them in politics in the magistracy in local administration in works of usefulness, and charity in the hunting-field, the banquet, and the ball-room.

The aris-

The mcrease of the peerage has naturally extended the social ramifications of the anstocracy Six hundred families ennobled,—their children bearing titles of nobility,—alhed by descent or connection with the first county families, and with the wealthiest commoners of other classes,—have stuck their roots far and wide

into the soil of English society In every county then influence is great, -m many, paramount

The untitled landed gentry, - upheld by the conser- The landed vative law of primogeniture,-are an ancient aristocracy in themselves, and the main source from which the peerage has been recruited In no other country is there such a class. - at once aristocratic and popular, and a bond of connection between the nobles and the commonalty

Many of these have been distinguished by hereditaly The baiontitles. __inferior to nobility, and conferring no political privileges, yet highly prized as a social distinction The baronetage, like the peerage, has been considerably increased during the last century On the accession of George III, there were about five hundred baronets1, in 1860, they had been increased to no less than eight hundred and sixty 2 During the sixty years of this reign, the extraordinary number of four hundred and ninety-four baronetcies were created 8 Of these a large number have been conferred for political services, and by far the greater part are enjoyed by men of family and fortune Still the taste for titles was difficult to satiate

The ancient and honourable dignity of knighthood Orders of was conferred unsparingly by George III upon little hood men for little services, until the title was well moh degraded After the king's escape from assassination at the hands of Margaret Nicholson, so many knighthoods were conferred on persons presenting congratulatory addresses to the Crown, that "a knight of

&lt;sup>1</sup> Betham's Baronetage Gentl seventy-five of Iteland Mag lix 598

Scotland and Nova Scotia, and

<sup>2</sup> This number is from 1761 to <sup>2</sup>Viz, six hundled and seventy-list, from a paper prepared by the form bundled and leaven bundled at Air Pulman, Clatencieux King-hundred and eleven bundles of at-Aira

Peg Nicholson's order" became a by-word The degradation of kinghthood by the indiscriminate liberality of the Crown in granting it, continued until a recent time

Still these were not kinghthoods enough, and in 1783 the king instituted the Order of St Patrick Scotland had its most ancient Order of the Thistle: but no order of kinghthood had, until that time, been appropriated to Ireland. The Hanoverian Guelphic Order of Kinghthood had also been opened to the ambition of Ringhshmen; and William IV, during his neigh, added to its roll, a goodly company of English kinghts

The Order of the Bath, originally a military order, was enlarged in 1815, and again in 1847, the queen added a civil division to the order, to comprise such persons as by their personal services to the Crown, or by the performance of public duties, have merited the roval favour.

Other classes siding with the aristocracy

Besides these several titled orders, may be noticed officers enjoying naval and military rank, whose numbers were extraordinarily augmented by the long waith France, and by the extension of the British possessions abroad. Men holding high offices in the state, the church, the law, the universities, and other great incorporations, have also associated their powers and influence with those of the nobility.

Wealth favourable to the aristocracy The continual growth and accumulation of property have been a source of mereasing strength to the British nobles Wealth is, in itself, an anstocracy It may desire to rival the nobility of a country, and even to detact from its glory But in this land of old associations, it seeks only to enjoy the smiles and favours of the aristocracy—craves admission to its society,—aspires to its connection,—and is ambitious of its dignities. The learned professions, commerce, manufactures, and public employments have created an enormous body of persons of independent income, some connected with the landed gentry, others with the commercial classes. All these form part of the independent "gentry". They are spread over the fanest parts of the country, and noble cities have been built for their accommodation Bath, Cheltenham, Leanington, and Brighton attest their numbers, and their opulence 1 With much social influence and political weight, they form a strong outwork of the peerage, and uphold its ascendency by moral as well as political support.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Letters Patent, 24th May, 1847, London Gazette, p. 1951.

The professions lean, as a body, on the higher ranks The professions of society The Church is peculiarly connected with some the landed interest. Everywhere the clergy cleave to power, and the vast lay patronage vested in the proprietors of the soil, draws close the bond between them and the Church The legal and medical professions, again, being mainly supported by wealthy patrons, have the same political and social interests

How vast a community of rank, wealth, and intelligence do these several classes of society constitute! The House of Lords, in truth, is not only a privileged body, but a great representative institution,—standing out as the embodiment of the aristociatic influence, and sympathies of the country

<sup>1</sup> Bath has been termed the "City of the Three-per-cent Consols"

CHAP. VI.

THE HOUSE OF COMMONS -- NOMINATION BOROUGHS -- VARIOUS AND LIMITED RIGHTS OF ELECTION -BRIBLRY AT ELECTIONS -SALE OF SEATS . - GOVERNMENT INFLUENCE IN LARGE TOWNS - REVENUE OFFICERS DISFRANCHISED -VELATIOUS CONTESTS IN CITIES - RE-PRISENTATION OF SOCILAND AND IRCLAND -INJUSTICE IN THE TRIAL OF ELECTION PETITIONS -PLACES AND PENSIONS -BRIBES TO MEM-BERS -SHARES IN LOANS, LOTTERIES, AND CONTRACTS -SUCCESSIVE SCHEMES OF PARLIAMENTARY REPORM PRIOR TO 1830 -THE REFORM BILLS OF 1880-31, 1831, AND 1831-32 -CHANGES EFFECTED IN THE REPRESENTATION, BY THE REFORM ACTS OF 1832 -- BRIBERY SINCE 1832, AND MEASURES TAKEN TO RESTRAIN IT -DURATION OF RARLIA-MENTS - VOIE BY BALLOT - PROPERTY QUALIFICATION - LATER MEASURES OF PARLIAMENTARY REFORM

Unfaithfulness of the House of Commons to its trust

In preceding chapters, the valuous sources of political influence enjoyed by the Crown, and by the House of Lords, have been traced out Their united powers long maintained an ascendency in the councils and government of the state But great as were then own inherent powers, the main support of that ascendency was found among the representatives of the people, in the House of Commons If that body had truly represented the people, and had been faithful to its trust, it would have enjoyed an authority equal at least, if not superior, to that of the Crown and the House of Lords combined

ence and corruption

Its depend. The theory of an equipoise in our legislature, however, had been distorted in practice; and the House of Commons was at once dependent and corrupt

Crown, and the dominant political families who wielded its power, readily commanded a majority of that assembly A large proportion of the borough members were the nominees of peers and great landowners, or were mainly returned through the political interest of those magnates Many were the nominees of the Crown, or owed their seats to government influence. Rich adventurers,-having purchased their seats of the proprietors, or acquired them by bribery, - supported the ministry of the day, for the sake of honours, patronage, or court favour The county members were generally identified with the territorial anstocracy The adherence of a further class was secured by places and pensions by shares in loans, lotteries, and eontracts, and even by pecuniary bribes

The extent to which these various influences pievailed, and their effect upon the constitution of the legislature, are among the most instructive inquiries of the historian

The representative system had never aimed at theo- Defects of retical perfection, but its general design was to assemble representatives from the places best able to system contribute aids and subsidies, for the service of the Crown This design would naturally have allotted members to counties, cities, and boroughs, in proportion to then population, wealth, and prosperity; and though rudely carried into effect, it formed the basis of repiesentation, in early times But there were few large towns:-the population was widely scattered .- industry was struggling with unequal success in different places, and oppressed burgesses, -so far from pressing their fair claims to representation, -were reluctant to augment their burthers, by returning members to Parhament. Places were capriciously selected for that honour by the Crown,-and sometimes even by the sheriff1 .-- and were, from time to time omitted from the writs Some small towns failed to keep pace with the growing prosperity of the country, and some fell into decay, and in the meantime, unrepresented villages grew into places of importance. Hence mequalities in the representation were continually increasing They might have been redressed by a wise exercise of the ancient prerogative of creating and disfranchising boroughs, but the greater part of those created between the reigns of Henry VIII and Charles II were inconsiderable places, which afterwards became notorious as nomination boroughs 2 From the reign of Charles II .- when this prerogative was superseded, -the growing inequalities in the representation were left wholly without correction

From these causes, an electoral system had become established,—wholly inconsistent with any rational theory of representation. Its defects,—oughnally great, and aggravated by time and change,—had attained monstrous proportions in the middle of the last century

The first and most flagrant anomaly was that of nommation boroughs Some of these boroughs had been, from their first creation, too inconsiderable to aspire to independence, and being without any importance of their own, looked up for patronage and protection to the Crown, and to their territorial neighbours. The influence of the great nobles over such places as these was acknowledged, and exerted so far back as the fifteenth century. It was freely discussed, in the ragn of Elizabeth; when the

&lt;sup>1</sup> Glanville's Reports, Pief v.
<sup>2</sup> One hundred and eighty members were added to the House of Commons, by royal chauter, be
<sup>2</sup> Paston Letters, 11 103.

House of Commons was warned, with a wise foresight, lest "Lords' letters shall from henceforth bear all the sway" As the system of parliamentary government developed itself, such interest became more and more important to the nobles and great landowners, who accordingly spared no pains to extend it; and the insignificance of many of the boroughs, and a limited and capitoious franchise, gave them too easy a conquest. Places like Old Sarum, with fewer inhabitants than an ordinary hamlet, avowedly returned the nominees of their proprietors.2 In other boroughs of more pretensions in respect of population and property, the number of inhabitants enjoying the fianchise was so limited, as to bring the representation under the patronage of one or more persons of local or municipal influence

Not only were the electors few in number, but various partial and uncertain rights of election prevailed in and limited different boroughs. The common law right of ection election was in the inhabitant householders resident within the borough 8, but, in a large proportion of the boroughs, peculiar customs prevailed, by which this liberal franchise was restrained. In some, indeed, popular rights were enjoyed by custom; and all inhabitants paying "scot and lot," - or parish rates, - or all "potwallers," - being persons furnishing their own diet, whether householders or lodgers, --- were entitled to vote In others, none but those holding lands by burgage-tenure had the right of voting; in several, none but those enjoying corporate rights by royal charter. In many, these different rights were combined, or qualified by exceptional conditions

&lt;sup>1</sup> Debate on the Bill for the vahdity of burgesses not researt, 19th No 92
April, 1571, D'Ewes Jouin, 168—

3 Con
171.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Parl Return, Sess 1831—32. 8 Com Dig , iv 288, Glanville's Reports

by the House of Commons

Rights of election, so uncertain and confused, were electron determined founded upon the last determinations of the House of Commons, which,—however capricious, and devoid of settled punciples, -had a general tendency to restrict the ancient franchise, and to vest it in a more limited number of persons 1

In some of the corporate towns the mhabitants paying scot and lot, and freemen, were admitted to vote, in some, the freemen only, and in many, none but the governing body of the corporation At Buckingham, and at Bewdley, the 11ght of election was confined to the bailiff and twelve burgesses at Bath, to the mayor, ten aldermen, and twenty-four common-councilmen at Salisbury, to the mayor and corporation, consisting of fifty-six persons And where more popular rights of election were acknowledged, there were often very few mhabitants to exercise them Gatton enjoyed a liberal franchise All freeholders and inhabitants paying scot and lot were entitled to vote, but they only amounted to seven. At Tavistock, all freeholders rejoiced in the fianchise, but there were only ten At St Michael, all inhabitants paying scot and lot were electors, but there were only seven 2

Number of small bo roughe.

In 1793, the Society of the friends of the people were prepared to prove that in England and Wales seventy members were returned by thirty-five places, in which there were scarcely any electors at all, that ninety members were returned by forty-six places with less than fifty electors, and thurty-seven members by nineteen places, having not more than one hundred concerning Elections, 8vo, 1780, 1780, 1ntroduction to Menewether and Stephens, History of Boroughs,

&lt;sup>1</sup> Glanville's Reports, Determinations of the House of Commons Luders' Election Law, 289, 317, Luders' Election Reports, &c <sup>2</sup> Parl Return, Sess 1831—32,

electors! Such places were returning members, while Leeds, Birmingham, and Manchester were unrepie-sented, and the members whom they sent to Parliament, were the nominees of peers and other wealthy patrons. No abuse was more flagrant than the direct control of peers, over the constitution of the Lower House. The Duke of Norfolk was represented by eleven members, Lord Lonsdale by nine, Lord Darlington by seven, the Duke of Rutland, the Marquess of Buckingham, and Lord Caulington, each by six. Seats were held, in both Houses alike, by hereditary right

Where the number of electors in a borough was Indexy at sufficient to ensure their independence, in the exercise elections of the franchise, they were soon taught that their votes would command a price, and thus, where nomination ceased, the influence of bubbuy commenced.

Bribery at elections has long been acknowledged as one of the most shameful evils of our constitutional government. Though not wholly unknown in earlier times, it appears,—like too many other forms of corruption,—to have first become a systematic abuse in the regin of Charles II * The Revolution, by increasing the power of the House of Commons, served to enlarge the field of bribery at elections. As an example of the extent to which this practice prevailed, if was alleged that at the Westminster election, in 1695, Sir Walter Clarges, an unsuccessful candidate, expended 2000/ in binbery in the course of a few hours *

These notorious scandals led to the passing of the The Brack t 7 William III c 4 Bribery had already been bery Act of william recognised as an offence, by the common law 5, and III.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Pail Hist, xxx 789

<sup>2</sup> Oldfield's Representative Hist,

<sup>3</sup> Buil, in 1235, 1338, Dougl,

<sup>4</sup> Ibid, iv 615

<sup>5</sup> Buil, in 1235, 1338, Dougl,

<sup>8</sup> 1286

<sup>9</sup> Macaulav's Hist, i. 236

<sup>9</sup> Macaulav's Hist, i. 236

had been condemned by resolutions of the House of Commons 1 but this was the first statute to restrain and punish it This necessary measure, however, was designed rather to discourage the intrusion of 11ch strangers into the political preserves of the landowners, than for the general repression of bribery It seems to have had little effect, for Davenant, writing soon afterwards, spoke of "utter strangers making a promess through England, endeavouring by very large sums of money to get themselves elected It is said there are known brokers who have tried to stock-tob elections upon the Exchange, and that for many boroughs there was a stated price"2 An act of parhament was not likely to touch the causes of such corruption The increasing commerce of the country had brought forward new classes of men, who supplied their want of local connexions, by the unscrupulous use of riches Political morality may be elevated by extended liberties but bribery has everywhere been the vice of growing wealth 8

The prizes to be secured through seats in Panhament during the corrupt administrations of Walpole and Pelham, further encouraged the system of bribery, and early in the reign of George III. its notoriety became a public scandal from the year 181 B C In that year it was enacted that any one found guilty of using bribery to gam votes should be declared meapable of becoming a candidate for the next ten years "-Dr Laddell's Hist. of Rome These laws are enumerated in Colquboun's Roman Civil Law, § 2402 In France and America, bribery has been practised upon representatives rather than by the frequent laws against babery electors, - Do Tocqueville, 1 264.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Com Jonm, 1x 411, 517

<sup>2</sup> Essay on the Balance of Power, parenaris Works, m 329, 328 See also Pamphlets, "Freeholden's Plea agants Stock-jobbung Elections of Faibament Men," "Considerations upon Cor upt Elections of Heubes to serve in Pathament," 1701

3 4 The additional of the state o

&quot;The effect produced by the 1apid menease in wealth upon political morality [in Rome] is proved at elections, which may be dated &c.

The very first election of this reign, in 1761, was General signalised by unusual excesses. Never perhaps had election in bribery been resorted to with so much profusion 1 One class of candidates, now rapidly increasing, consisted The "Naof men who had amassed fortunes in the East and West, bobs" Indies, and were commonly distinguished as "Nabobs" Then ambition led them to aspire to a place in the legislature -their great wealth gave them the means of bribery, and the scenes in which they had studied politics, made them unscrupulous in corruption A seat in Parhament was for sale, like an estate; and they bought it, without hesitation or misgiving Speaking of this class, Lord Chatham said. "Without connexions, without any natural interest in the soil, the importers of foreign gold have forced their way into Parliament, by such a torrent of corruption as no private hereditary fortune could resist."2

To the landed gentry they had long since been obnoxious. A country squire, whatever his local influence, was overborne by the profusion of wealthy strangers Even a powerful noble was no match for . men, who brought to the contest the "wealth of the Indies" Nor were they regarded with much favour by the leaders of parties, for men who had bought their seats. - and paid dearly for them, - owed no allegiance to political patrons. Free from party connexions, they sought admission into Parliament, not so much with a view to a political career, as to serve mere personal ends,-to forward commercial speculations, to extend their connexions, and to gratify their social aspirations But their independence and ambition

<sup>1 &</sup>quot;Both the Court and particulars went greater lengths than in Wolp Mem., 1 42 any preceding times In truth, the 2 Jan 22nd, 1770 Paul. Hist, corruption of electors met, if not xvi 752

well fitted them for the service of the court. The king was struggling to disengage himself from the domination of party leaders, and here were the very men he needed,—without party the or political prepossessions,—daily increasing in numbers and influence,—and easily attracted to his interests by the hope of those rewards which are most coveted by the wealthy. They soon ranged themselves among the king's friends; and thus the court policy,—which was otherwise subversive of fixedom,—became associated with parliamentary corruption.

Bribery Act of 1762 The scandals of the election of 1761 led to the passing of an act in the following year, by which pecuniary penalties were first imposed for the offence of bribery. But the evil which it sought to correct, still continued without a check

Sale of boroughs

Where the return of members was left to a small, but independent body of electors, their individual votes were secured by bubery, and where it rested with propertors or corporations, the seat was purchased outright. The sale of boroughs,—an abuse of some antiquity?, and often practised since the time of Charles II,—became, at the commencement of this leigh, a general and notorious system. The right of property in boroughs was acknowledged, and capable of sale or transfer, like any other property. In 1766, Lord Hertford prevailed upon Lod Chatham's ministry to transfer to him the borough of Orford, which belonged to the Crown. And Sudbury, infamous for its corruption until its ultimate disfranchisement, publicly adventised itself for sale.

&lt;sup>1</sup> 2 Geo III c 24 <sup>2</sup> In 1571, the borough of Westbury was fined by the House of Commons for receiving a bribe of 41., and the mayor was ordered to

<sup>1</sup>efund the money - Com Journ,

Walpole's Mem , n 961
 7 & 8 Vict , c. 53
 Walpole's Mem , n 42

If a seat occupied by any member happened to be required by the government, for some other candidate, he was bought out, at a price agreed upon between Thus in 1764, we find Lord Chesterfield advising his son upon the best means of securing 1000l for the surrender of his seat, which had eost him 2000l at the beginning of the Parliament 1

The general election of 1768 was at least as corrupt General as that of 1761, and the sale of seats more open and election of undisguised. Some of the cases were so flagrant as to shock even the moral sentiments of that time corporation of Oxford, being heavily embarrassed, offered again to return their members, Sir Thomas Stapylton and Mr Lee, on payment of their bond debts. amounting to 5670l Those gentlemen refused the offer, saving that as they did not intend to sell the corporation, they could not afford to buy them, and brought the matter before the House of Commons The mayor and ten of the aldermen were committed to Newgate, but after a short imprisonment, were discharged with a reprimand from the Speaker Not discouraged, however, by their imprisonment, they completed, in Newgate, a bargain which they had already commenced, and sold the representation of their city, to the Duke of Marlborough and the Earl of Abingdon Meanwhile the town elerk carried off the books of the corporation which contained evidence of the bargain, and the business was laughed at and forgotten 2

For the borough of Poole, there were three candidates Mauger, the successful candidate, promised the corporation 1000l, to be applied to public purposes, if he should be elected, Gulston made them a present of

Oct 19th, 1764, Letters of Paul Hist, xvi 397, Walpole's Loid Chesterfield to his son, iv. Mem, in 153

750l, as a mark of gratatude for the election of his father on a former occasion, and Calcraft appears to have vamly tempted their with the more liberal offer of 1500l. The election was declared void <sup>1</sup>

The representation of the borough of Ludgershall was sold for 9000l by its owner, the celebrated George Selwyn, and the general price of boroughs was said to be raised at that time, from 2500l to 4000l or 5000l. by the competition of the East and West Indians 2 It was notorious at the time, that agents or "boroughbrokers" were commissioned by some of the smaller boroughs, to offer them to the highest bidder Two of these, Reynolds and Hickey, were taken into custody, by order of the House, and some others were sent to Newgate 8 While some boroughs were thus sold in the gnoss, the electors were purchased elsewhere by the most lavish bribery The contest for the borough of Northampton was stated to have cost the candidates "at least 30,000l a side "4 Nay, Lord Spencer is said to have spent the incredible sum of 70,000l in contesting this borough, and in the proceedings upon an election petition which ensued 5

In 1771, the systematic bribery which had long prevalled at New Shoreham was exposed by an election committee—the first appointed under the Grenville Act of It appeared that a corrupt association, comprising the majority of the electors, and calling itself "The Christian Club," had, under the guise of charity, been in the habit of selling the borough to the highest bidder, and

<sup>1</sup> Feb 10th, 1769, Com Journ, April 12th, 1768, vs 274

2 Letters of Lord Chesterfield to be seen, Dec 19th, 1767, April 12th, 1768, vs 20, 274

6 (vs eventush Deb. 1 191

&quot; Walpole's Mem, n. 157

dividing the spoil amongst its members. They all fearlessly took the bribery oath, as the bargam had been made by a committee of their club, who abstained from voting, and the money was not distributed till after the election. But the returning officer, having been himself a member of the society, and knowing all the electors who belonged to it, had rejected their votes. This case was too gross to be lightly treated, and an act was passed to disfianchise the members of the club, eighty-one in number, and to admit to the franchise, all the forty shilling freeholders of the Rape of Bramber. An address was also voted to prosecute the five members of the committee, for a corrupt conspiracy 1

In 1775, bubery was proved to have prevailed so Hadon widely and shamelessly at Hindon, that an election Shaftescommittee recommended the disfranchisement of the bury cases borough2, and at Shaftesbury the same abuse was no less notorious 8

In 1782, the universal corruption of the electors of Chicklade Cricklade was exposed before an election committee. It appeared that out of two hundred and forty voters, eighty-three had already been convicted of birbery, and that actions were pending against forty-three others 4 A bill was accordingly brought in, to extend the franchise to all the freeholders of the adjoining hundreds Even this moderate measure encountered much opposition, - especially in the Lords, where Lord Mansfield and Lord Chancellor Thurlow fought stoutly for the corrupt electors Though the bill did not seek to disfranchise a single person, it was termed a bill of pains and penalties, and counsel were heard against it.

<sup>1</sup> Com Jouin, xxxiii 69, 102, 179, 11 Geo III c 55 Com Joun, xxxv 118 4 Parl Hist, vvn 1027 1107. 1388

But the cause of the electors, even with such supporters, was too bad to be defended, and the bill was passed  $^{\rm 1}$

Bubery encouraged by the King There can be little doubt that the king himself was cognisant of the bribery which, at this period, was systomatically used to secure Parhamentary support Nay, more, he personally advised and recommended it Writing to Lord North, 16th October, 1779, he said "If the Duke of Northumberland requires some gold pills for the election, it would be wrong not to satisfy him"

Attempts to restrain

When the disgraceful traffic in boloughs was exposed in the House of Commons, before the general election of 1768, Alderman Beckford brought in a bill requiring an oath to be taken by every member, that he had not been concerned in any bribery According to Horace Walpole, the country gentlemen were favourable to this bill, as a protection against "great loids, Nabobs, commissaires, and West Indians,"8 but the extreme stringency of the oath proposed.—which, it was urged, would result in perjury. a realousy lest, under some of the provisions of the bill, the privileges of the House should be submitted to the courts of law, -but above all, a disinclination to deal hardly with practices, which all had been concerned in, had profited by, or connived at,-ultimately secured its rejection

Agam, in 1782 and 1783, Lord Mahon proposed bills to pievent bribery and expenses at elections; but on both occasions was unsuccessful. The same evil practices continued,—unchecked by legislation, committed by statesmen, and tolerated by public opinion

<sup>1 22</sup> Geo III c 31 3 Walpole's Mem , ni. 153, 157, 2 King's Letters to Lord North , 159 Lord Brougham's Works in 137.188

The system of purchasing seats in the House of Commons, however indefensible in principle, was at least seats its preferable to the general corruption of electors, and in some respects, to the more prevalent practice of nomination. To buy a seat in Parliament was often the only means, by which an independent member could gain admission to the House of Commons If he accepted a seat from a patron, his independence was compromised, but if he acquired a seat by purchase, he was free to vote according to his own opinions and conscience Thus, we find Sir Samuel Romilly,-the most pure and virtuous of public men,-who had declined one seat from the favour of the Prince of Wales1, justifying the purchase of another, for the sake of his own independence, and the public interests Winting in September, 1805, he says "As long as burgage-tenune representatives are only of two descriptions,-they who buy their seats, and they who discharge the most sacred of trusts at the pleasure, and almost as the servants of another,-surely there can be no doubt in which class a man would choose to eniol himself, and one who should carry his notions of punity so far, that thinking he possessed the means of rendering service to his country, he would yet rather seclude himself altogether from Parliament, than get into it by such a violation of the theory of the constitution, must be under the dominion of a species of moral superstition which must wholly disqualify him for the discharge of any public duties "2

The extent to which the sale of seats prevailed, and its influence over the composition of the House of Commons, may also be exemplified from the diary of Sir Samuel Romilly, in 1807 "Therney, who manages this business for the friends of the late administration, assures me that he can hear of no seats to be disposed of After a Parliament which had lived little more than four months, one would naturally suppose that those seats which are regularly sold by the proprietors of them, would be very cheap they are, however, in fact, sold now at a higher price than was ever given for them before. Tierney tells me that he has offered 10,000l for the two seats of Westbury, the property of the late Lord Abingdon, and which are to be made the most of by trustees for creditors, and has met with a refusal 6000l and 5500l have been given for seats. with no stipulation as to time, or against the event of a speedy dissolution by the king's death, or by any change of administration. The truth is, that the new ministers have bought up all the seats that were to be disposed of, and at any pinces Amongst others, Sir C H----, the great dealer in boroughs, has sold all he had to ministers With what money all this is done I know not, but it is supposed that the king, who has greatly at heart to preserve this new administration, the favourite objects of his choice, has advanced a very large sum out of his privy puise

&lt;sup>1</sup> Romilly's Life, u 114-120 Diany, Life, u, 122

"This buying of scats is detestable; and yet it is almost the only way in which one in my situation, who is resolved to be an independent man, can get into Parlament. To come in by a popular election, in the present state of the representation, is quite impossible, to be placed there by some great lord, and to vote as he shall direct, is to be in a state of complete dependence, and nothing hardly remains but to owe a scat to the sacrifice of a part of one's fortime. It is true, that many men who buy seats do it as a matter of pecuniary speculation, as a profitable way of employing their money they carry on a political trade; they buy their seats and sell their votes". He afterwards bought his seat for Horsham of the Duke of Norfolk, for 20007

So regular was the market for seats, that where it was Annual inconvenient to candidates to pay down the purchasemoney, they were accommodated by its commutation Parliainto an annual rent It was the sole redeeming quality of this traffic, that boroughs were generally disposed of to persons professing the same political opinions as the proprietors 2

The practice of sellmo and letting seats at last became Sale of so notorious, that it could no longer be openly tolerated sentered by by Parhament In 1809, Mr Curwen brought in a Act, 1800 bill to prevent the obtaining of seats in Parliament by corrupt practices, which after much discussion in both Houses, he succeeded in passing. It imposed heavy penalties upon corrupt agreements for the return of members, whether for money, office, or other considenation, and in the case of the person returned, added the forfeiture of his seat.8 But notwithstanding these penalties, the sale of seats, This Act -if no longer so open and avowed-continued to be the carried on by private airangement, so long as nomination boroughs were suffered to exist, as one of the anomales of our representative system The representation of Hastings, being vested in a close corporation, was regularly sold, until the reform act had enlarged the franchise, for 6000l4 And until 1832, an extensive sale of similar boroughs continued to be negotiated by the Secretary to the Treasury, by the "whippers-in" of the Opposition, and by proprietors and close corpora-Life of Sir S Romilly, ii 200 Deb, vav 354, 617, 837, 1032,

&amp;c From private information 2 Ibid , 202 3 49 Geo III c 118, Hansard's

tions So long as any boroughs remained, which could be bought and sold, the market was well supplied both with buyers and sellers

Government influence in larger boroughs Boroughs whose members were nominated, as to an office, and boroughs bought in the open market, or corrupted by lavish bilbery, could not pretend to popular election. The members for such places were independent of the people, whom they professed to represent. But there were populous places, thriving ports, and manufacturing towns, whence representatives, fieldy chosen, might have been expected to find their way into the House of Commons. But these very places were the favourito resort of the government candidates.

The seven years' war had increased the national debt, and the taxation of the country. The number of officers employed in the collection of the revenue, was consequently augmented. Being the servants of the government, their votes were secured for the ministerial candidates. It was quite understood to be a part of their duty, to vote for any candidate who hoisted the colours of the minister of the day. Wherever they were most needed by the government, their number was the greatest. The smaller boroughs were already secured by purchase, or overwhelming local interest, but the cities and ports had some pretensions to independence. Here, however, troops of petty officers of customs and excase were driven to the poll, and,—supported by venal freemen,—overpowered the independent electors.

Revenue officers disfranchised In 1768, Mr Dowdeswell had in vain endeavoured to insert a clause in Alderman Beckford's bribery bill, for the disqualification of revenue officers In 1770 he proposed a bill to disqualify these officers from voting at elections, and was supported by Mr Grenville. It was urged, however, that they were already prohibited from metrfeing at elections, though not from voting, and that no further restnant could reasonably be required But, in truth, the ministry of Loid North were little disposed to surrender so important a source of influence, and the bill was accordingly rejected 1

The measure, however, was merely postponed for a time. The dangerous policy of the Court, under Lord North,—and its struggle to rule by prerogative and influence,—convinced all liberal statesmen, of the necessity of protecting public liberty, by more effectual safeguards. Meanwhile the disastrous American war further aggravated the evils of taxes, and tax-collectors.

In 1780, a bill to disqualify revenue officers was proposed by Mi Crewe, and though rejected on the second reading, it met with much more support than Mr Dowdeswell's previous measure? It was again brought forward in 1781, with less success than in the previous year. But the time was now at hand, when a determined assault was contemplated upon the influence of the Crown, and in 1782, the disqualification of revenue officers,—which had hitherto been an opposition measure,—was proposed by the ministry of Lord Rockingham I is impetative necessity was proved by Lord Rockingham himself, who stated that seventy elections chiefly depended on the votes of these officers; and that eleven thousand five hundred officers of customs and excess were electors.

&lt;sup>1</sup> By a majority of 263 to 188, Pal Hist, x1; 834, Cavendash Pal Hist, xx1 1898, Dub, 1442

<sup>2</sup> The numbers were 224 to 195, XXII 295

Ratin Line 1 Annual 1 Annual

said that one hundred and twenty out of the five hundred voters, had obtained revenue appointments, through the influence of a single person

This necessary measure was now carried through both Houses, by large majorities, though not without 1emonstrances against its principle, especially from Lord Mansfield It is not to be denied that the disqualification of any class of men is, abstractedly, opposed to hberty, and an illiberal principle of legislation, but here was a gross constitutional abuse requiring correction, and though many voters were deprived of the rights of citizenship, - these rights could not be freely exercised, and were sacrificed in order to protect the general liberties of the people Had there been a franchise so extensive as to leave the general body of electors free to vote, without being overborne by the servants of the Crown, it would have been difficult to justify the policy of disfranchisement But with a franchise so restricted that the electors were controlled by the Crown, in the choice of their representatives, the measure was necessary in the interests of freedom

Vexations contests in populous cities

Such being the dependence and corruption of the smaller boroughs,—and such the government influence in many of the larger towns,—there were still a few great cities, with popular rights of election, whose inhabitants neither landowners nor government could control, and which were beyond the influence of conjuption. Here, at least, there might have been a free expression of public opinion. But such were the vices of the laws which formerly regulated elections—laws not designed for the protection of the franchise,—that a popular candidate, with a majority of votes, might be met by obstacles so vexatious and oppressive, as to debar lim from the free suffrage of the electors. If not defeated at the poll, by 110ts and open violence, - or defrauded of his votes, by the partiality of the returning officer, or the factious manœuvres of his opponents, - he was numed by the extravagant costs of his victory The poll was hable to be kept open for forty days, entailing an enormous expense upon the candidates, and prolific of bribery, treating, and riots During this period, the public-houses were thrown open, and drunkenness and disorder prevailed in the streets, and at the hustings Bands of hired ruffians, - armed with bludgeons, and inflamed by drink, - paraded the public thoroughfares, intimidating voters, and resisting their access to the polling places Candidates assailed with offensive, and often dangerous missiles, braved the penalties of the pillory, while then supporters were exposed to the fury of a drunken mob Even now, a contested election, which lasts but a day, is often a reproach to a civilsed people What then must it have been before any of its worst vices had been controlled, and when it continued for upwards of a month?

The most conspicuous example of all the abuses Westmanof which the old electoral system was capable, was that too, 1784 of the Westminster election, in 1784 Mr Fox had incurred the violent resentment of the government, by his recent opposition to Mr Pitt, and the Court party It had been determined, that all the members who had supported the Coalition should be opposed, at the gene-1al election, and Mr Fox, then ablest leader, was the foremost man to be assailed The election, - disgraced throughout by scenes of drunkenness, tumult, and violence 1,-and by the coarsest libels and lampoons,-was

&lt;sup>1</sup> In one of the brawls which against persons belonging to Mr arose duning its progress, a man was Fox's party, but they were all ackilled, whose death was charged quitted

continued for forty days. When the poll was closed, Mr Fox was in a majority of two hundred and thrity-six above En Cecil Wray, one of the Court candidates. But he was now robbed of the fituits of his victory by the High Bailiff, who withheld his return, and commenced a scrutnry into the votes. By withholding the return, after the day on which the writ was returnable, he demed the successful candidate his right to six in Parliament, and autorpated the junisdiction of the House of Commons, by which court alone, the validity of the election could then properly be determined This unwarrantable pioceeding would have excluded Mr Fox from his rightful place in Parliament, but he had aheady been returned for Kirkwall, and took his seat, at the commencement of the session

Apart from the vexation and injustice to which Mr Fox had been exposed, the expense of the scrutiny was estimated at 18,000l In vain his friends endeavoured to induce the House of Commons to order the High Bailiff to make an immediate return That officer was upheld by M1 Pitt, who was followed, at first, by a large majority Mr Fox, in his bitterness, exclaimed "I have no reason to expect indulgence nor do I know that I shall meet with bare justice in this House" As no return had been made, which could be submitted to the adjudication of an election committee. Mr Fox was at the mercy of a hostile majority of the House The High Bailiff was, indeed. directed to proceed with the scrutiny, with all practicable dispatch, but at the commencement of the following session,-when the scrutiny had been proceeding for eight months,-it had only been completed in a single parish, and had but slightly affected the relative position of the candidates Nothwithstanding this ex-posure of the monstrous injustice of the scrutiny, Mr Pitt still resisted a motion for directing the High Bailiff to make an immediate return But,-blindly as he had hitherto been followed .- such was the miguity of the cause which he persisted in supporting, that all his influence failed in commanding a larger majority than nine, and on the 3rd of March, he was defeated by a majority of thirty-eight 1 The minister was justly punished for his ungenerous conduct to an opponent, and for his contempt of the law, -- prompted, to use the words of Mr Fox, by "the malignant wish of gratifying an inordinate and implacable spirit of resentment "2 But a system which had thus placed a popular candidate.-in one of the first cities of the kingdom.-at the mercy of factious violence, and ministerial oppression. was a flagrant outrage upon the principles of freedom Parliament further marked its reprobation of such proceedings, by limiting every poll to fifteen days, and closing a scrutiny six days before the day on which the writ was returnable 8

In the counties, the franchise was more free and Tearstornal hberal, than in the majority of cities and boroughs All influence in counties forty-shilling freeholders were entitled to vote, and in this class were comprised the country gentlemen, and independent yeomanry of England Hence the county constituencies were at once the most numerous, the most responsible, and the least corrupt They represented public opinion more faithfully than other electoral bodies; and on many occasions, had great weight in advancing a popular cause. Such were then respectability and public spirit, that most of the earlier schemes

By 162 sgaust 124, Ann Reg, 846, ibid, xxv 3, Tomhne's Lafe 1784, xvvn 180, Adolphus's Hist, of Pitt, 1 542, in 7, 24, &c , Lond v 115-118, 108
 Pail Hist, xxv 808, 843,
 2 Gleo III c 84

of Parliamentary reform contemplated the disfranchisement of boroughs, and the simple addition of members to the countries But notwithstanding their unquestionable ments, the county electors were peculiarly exposed to the influence of the great nobles, who held nearly a tendal sway Illustrious ancestry, vast possessions, high offices, distinguished political services and connextons, placed them at the head of the society of their several countries, and local influence, and the innate respect for anistocracy which animates the English people, combined to make them the political leaders of the gentry and yeomanny In some countries, powerful commoners were no less dominant. The greater number of the counties in England and Wales were represented by members of these families, or by gentlemen enjoying their confidence and pationage 1

A contested election was more often due to the navalry of great houses, than to the conflict of pointeal principles among the electors, but, as the candidates generally belonged to opposite parties, then contentions produced political discussion and enlightenment Such contests were conducted with the spint and rigour which rivalry inspires, and with an extravagance which none but princely fortunes could support. They were like the wars of small states. In 1708, the Duke of Portland is said to have spent 40,000 in contesting Westmoreland and Cumberland with Sir James Lowther, who, on his side, must have spont at least as much? And, within the memory of some men still living, an election for the country of York has been known to cost nearly 150,0000?

to Oldfield's Representative Hist, 286. Speech of Lord J Russell, March 1st, 1831, Hansard's Deb, 3rd Sec. 11, 1074.

Great as were the defects of the representation of Regressen England,—those of Scotland were greater, and of more litions of general operation. The county franchise consisted in "superiorities," which were bought and sold in the market, and were enjoyed independently of property or residence. The burgh franchise was vested in selfelected town-councillors. The constituences, therefore, represented neither population nor property, but the narrowest local interests. It was shown in 1823, that the total number of persons enjoying the franchise was less than three thousand. In no county did the number of electors exceed two hundred and forty in one it was as low as nine, and of this small number, a consideable proportion were fictitious votics.—without property, and not even resident in the country 1

In 1881, the total number of county voters did not exceed two thousand five hundred, and the constituences of the sxty-six boroughs, amounted to one thousand four hundred and forty. Thus the entire electoral body of Scotland was not more than four thousand. The country of Argyil, with a population of one hundred thousand, had but one hundred and fifteen electors, of whom eighty-four were out-voters, without any land within the country Catthness, with thirty thousand inhabitants, contained forty-seven ficeholders, of whom thirty-six were out-voters. Inverness-shine, with ninety thousand inhabitants, habit and but eighty-eight ficeholders, of whom fifty were out-voters. Edinburgh and Glasgow, the two first cines of Scotland, had each a constituency of thurty-three persons?

With a franchise so limited and partial as this,

&lt;sup>1</sup> Hansard's Deb , 2nd Ser , iv 231d, 1831, Hansard's Deb , 3rd 611 Ser , vn 529 <sup>2</sup> Speech of Lord Advocate, Sept

all the counties and burghs, without exception, had fallen under the influence of political patrons 1 A great kingdom, with more than two millions of people, -intelligent, instructed, industrious, and praceable, - was virtually disfranchised Meanwhile, the potentates who neturned the members to Panhament,-instead of contending among themselves, like then brothren in Enoland, and joining opposite parties, -were generally disposed to make their terms with the ministers, and by skilful management, the entire representation was engrossed by the friends and agents of the government It was not secured, however, without a profuse distinbution of patronage, which, judiciously administered, had long retained the allegiance of members coming from the north of the Tweed 2 Lord Cockburn, a contemporary witness, -has given a spirited account of the mode in which elections in Scotland were conducted He says "The return of a single opposition member was never to be expected The return of three or four was muaculous, and these startling exceptions were always the result of local ac-Whatever this system may have been cidents originally, it had grown, in reference to the people, into as complete a mockery, as if it had been invented for their degradation The people had nothing to do with it It was all managed by town-councils, of never more than thirty-three members, and every towncouncil was self-elected, and consequently perpetuated its own interests. The election of either the town or

<sup>1</sup> Oldfield's Representative Hist, had only once, in his long political vi 294, Edinburgh Review, Oct 1830, Art X

was never to be present at a debate, vu. 543 or absent at a division, and that he life, ventured to vote according to his conscience, and that he found I twas said of one Scotch county on that occasion he had votted member, "that his invariable rule wrong "—Hansaid's Deb., 3rd Sci.,

the county member, was a matter of such utter indifference to the people, that they often only knew of it by the ringing of a bell, or by seeing it mentioned next day in a newspaper, for the farce was generally performed in an apartment from which, if convenient, the public could be excluded, and never in the open air "1

Where there were districts of burghs, each towncouncil elected a delegate, and the four or five delegates elected the member, "and, instead of bribing the towncouncils, the established practice was to bribe only the delegates, or indeed only one of them, if this could secure the majority "2

A case of inconceivable grotesqueness was related by the Lord Advocate, in 1831 The county of Bute, with a population of fourteen thousand, had twentyone electors, of whom one only resided in the county. "At an election at Bute, not beyond the memory of man, only one person attended the meeting, except the Sheriff and the returning officer He, of course, took the chair, constituted the meeting, called over the roll of freeholders, answered to his own name, took the vote as to the Preses, and elected himself. He then moved and seconded his own nomination, put the question as to the vote, and was unanimously returned "8

This close system of elections had existed even before the Union, but though sufficiently notorious, the British Parliament had paid little attention to its defects

In 1818, and again in 1823, Lord Archibald Hamil- Motions ton had shown the state of the Royal Burghs,—the self- by Lord Archibald election, and irresponsibility of the councillors,—and Hamilton, 1818, 1823 their uncontrolled authority over the local funds. The questions then raised referred to municipal rather than parliamentary reform, but the latter came incidentally under review, and it was admitted that there was "no popular election, or pretence of popular election" in In 1823, Lord Archibald exposed the state of the county representation, and the general electional system of the country, and found one hundred and seventeen supporters in the country of the country is a few and the seventeen supporters.

Life of Jeffrey, 1 75
 Cockburn's Mem, 1 88

&lt;sup>8</sup> Hansaid's Deb, 3rd Ser, vii. 529.

Representation of Edinbuigh, 1826

In 1824, the question of Scotch representation was brought forward by M1 Abercromby. The inhabitants of Edinburgh complained, by petition3, that the representation of this capital city,-the metropolis of the North, with upwards of one hundred thousand inhabitants,-was returned by thirty-three electors, of whom nmeteen had been chosen by their predecessors in the town-council! Mr Abercromby moved for leave to bring in a Bill to amend the representation of that city, --- as an instalment of Parliamentary reform in Scotland His motion failed, and being renewed in 1826, was equally unsuccessful Such proposals were always met in the same manner When general measures of 1eform were advocated, the magnitude of the change was urged as the reason for rejecting them: and when, to obviate such objections, the correction of any particular defect was attempted, its exceptional character was a decisive argument against it 4 Prior to 1801, the British Parliament was not con-

Represen-

... Prior to 1801, the British Pailament was not concerned in the state of the representation of the people of Ireland But on the umon of that country, the defects of its representation were added to those of a England and Scotland, in the constitution of the united

This petition had been presented 455, ibid, viv. 107, ibid, xv. 163

, Parliament The counties and boroughs in Treland . were at least as much under the influence of great patrons, as in England It is true, that in arranging the terms of the Union, Mr Pitt took the opportunity of abolishing several of the smaller nomination boroughs, but many were spared, which were searcely less under the patronage of noblemen and landowners, and places of more consideration were reduced, by restricted rights of election, to a similar dependence. In Belfast, in Carlow, in Wexford, and in Sligo, the right of election was vested in twelve self-elected burgesses in Limerick and Kilkenny, it was in the corporation and freemen In the counties, the influence of the territorial famihes was equally dominant. For the sake of political influence, the landowners had subdivided their estates into a producious number of forty-shilling freeholds. and until the freeholders had fallen under the domimon of the pnests, they were faithful to their Protestant patrons According to the law of Lieland. freeholds were created without the possession of property, and the votes of the freeholders were considered as the absolute right of the proprietor of the soil Hence it was, that after the Union more than two thirds of the Lish members were returned, not by the people of Ireland, but by about fifty or sixty influential pations 1

Such being the state of the representation in the Majority of United Kingdom, an actual majority of the members of the House of Commons, were returned by an inconside. The Point of Richmond in 1780, not more than six thousand men returned a clear majority of the House of Commons 1 It was alleged in the petition of the Society of the Friends of the People. presented by Mr Grey in 1793, that eighty-four individuals absolutely returned one hundred and fiftyseven members to Parliament, that seventy influential men secured the return of one hundred and fifty members, and that, in this manner, three hundred and seven members,-being the majority of the House, before the umon with Ireland -- were returned to Parhament by one hundred and fifty-four pations, of whom forty were peers 2 In 1821, Mr Lambton stated that he was prepared to prove by evidence, at the bar of the House of Commons, "that one hundred and eighty individuals returned, by nomination or otherwise. three hundred and fifty members" 3

Wakefield's Statistical and Political Account of Ireland, u 200, Hist, vi 200—280

Di Oldfield's Representative History furnishes still more elaborate statistics of parliamentary patronage According to his detailed statements, no less than two hundred and eighteen members were returned for counties and boroughs, in England and Wales, by the nomination or influence of eighty-seven peers, one hundred and thuty-seven were returned by ninety commoners, and sixteen by the Government, making a total number of three hundred and seventy-one nominee members Of the forty-five members for Scotland, thirty-one were returned by twenty-one peers, and the remainder by fourteen commoners. Of the hundred members for Ireland, fifty-one were returned by thirty-six peers, and twenty by mineteen commoners. The general result of these surprising statements is,-

Paul Hist, xxi, 686

Duke of Rutland, Lord Lonsdale, <sup>2</sup> Ibid, xxx 787 the Duke of Newcastle, and about Hansad's Beb. 2nd Sen. y twenty other holdens of baroughs 859 Writing in 1821, Sydney Smith says. "The country belongs to the

, that of the six hundred and fifty-eight members of the House of Commons, four hundred and eighty-seven were returned by nomination, and one hundred and seventy-one only were representatives of independent constituencies 1 Such matters did not admit of proof, and were beyond the scope of Parliamentary inquiries . but after making allowances for imperfect evidence and exaggeration, we are unable to resist the conclusion, that not more than one third of the House of Commons, were the free choice even of the limited bodies of electors then entrusted with the franchise

Scandalous as were the electoral abuses which law Injustice in and custom formerly permitted, the conduct of the electron pe-House of Commons, in the trial of election petitions, was titions more scandalous still Boroughs were bought and sold, - electors were notonously bribed by wholesale and retail. - returning officers were partial and corrupt But, in defiance of all justice and decency, the majority of the House of Commons connived at these practices, when committed by their own party, and only condemned them, when their political opponents were put upon their trial Dat veniam corvis,-vexat censura columbas The Commons having, for the sake of their own independence, insisted upon an exclusive jurisdiction in matters of election, were not ashamed to prostatute at to party trust, and abused at They assumed a judical office, and dishonoured at This discreditable perversion of justice had grown up with those electoral abuses, which an honest judicature would have tended to correct, and reached its greatest excesses, in the reigns of George II and George III

Originally, controvcrted elections had been tried by Oldfield's Representative Hist, 1816, vi 285-300

select committees specially nominated, and afterwards by the Committee of Privileges and Elections This latter committee had been nonmated by the House itself, heme composed of Phyv Councillors and emment lawyers, well qualified by their learning, for the judicial inquiries entrusted to them In 1603, it commised the names of Su Francis Bacon and Sir Thomas Fleming 1; in 1623, the names of Sn Edward Coke, Sir Heneage Finch, Mr Pym, Mr. Glanville, Sir Roger North, and Mr Selden 2 The committee was then confined to the members nominated by the House itself ; but being afterwards enlarged by the introduction of all Privy Councillors and Gentlemen of the Long Robe, it became, after 1672, an open committee, in which all who came were allowed to have voices This committee was henceforth exposed to all the evils of large and fluctuating numbers, and an irresponsible constitution, and at length, in the time of Mr Speaker Onslow, a hearing at the bar of the House itself,-which in special cases had already been occasionally resorted to, -was deemed preferable to the less public and responsible judicature of the committee. Here, however, the partiality and injustice of the judges were soon notorious. The merits of the election, on which they affected to adjudicate, were little regarded To use the words of Mr. Grenville, "The Court was thin to hear, and full to judge"4 Parties tried then strength, - the fliends of rival candidates canvassed and manœuvred. - and seats corruptly gamed, were as corruptly protected, or voted away The right of election was wiested from the voters, and usurped by the elected body, who thus exercised a vicious self-election ministers of the day, when they commanded a majority, sustained their own friends; and brought all their forces to bear against the members of the Opposition. This flagitious custom formed part of the parhamentary organisation, by which the influence of the Crown and its ministers, was maintained. It was not until a government was falling, that its friends were in danger of losing their scats The struggle between Sir Robert Walpole and his enemies was determined in 1741,not upon any question of public policy,- but by the defeat of the minister on the Chippenhani Election Petition.

<sup>1</sup> Com Journ 1 149 (Mach 20dh) Their are eather appointments in D'Ewes' Journal 1 Com Journ 1 716, Gann wille's Rep. Fred vir.

To remedy these evils, and remove the opprobrum The Grenof notorious injustice from the House of Commons, Mr ville Act, Grenville introduced in 1770, his celebrated measure.since known as the Grenville Act, and a landmark in Parliamentary history He proposed to transfer the judicature, in election cases, from the House itself. to a committee of thirteen members, selected by the sitting members and petitioners from a list of forty-nine. chosen by ballot,-to whom each party should add a nominee, to advocate their respective interests. This tribunal, constituted by Act of Parliament, was to decide, without appeal, the ments of every controverted election: being, in fact, a court independent of the House, though composed of its own members 1 The main objection urged against this measure was that the privileges of the House were compromised, and its discretion limited, by the binding obligations of a statute It is certain that much might have been done by authority of the House itself, which was henceforth Paul Hist, avi 904—923, Cavendish Deb, 1 476, 505

regulated by statute, - the only legal power required, being that of administering an oath But Mr Grenville districted the House of Commons, and saw no security for the permanence, or honest trial of the new system, except in a law which they could not set aside

This Act was at first limited to one year, and Horacc Walpole insinuates that Mi Grenville, when in opposition, was willing "to give a sore wound to the influence of the Crown," but hoping to return to office, took care not to weaken his own future power as a minister 1 But the suggestion for making the Act temporary proceeded from Lord Clare2, and not from Mr Grenville, who was honestly persuaded that the "system must end in the rum of public liberty, if not checked "8 At this time his health and spirits were failing, and he died a few months after the passing of his measure

Made perpetual

The Grenville Act was continued from time to tune. and in 1774, Sir Edwin Sandys brought in a bill to make it perpetual It encountered a strong opposition, especially from Mr. Fox, who dreaded the surrender of the puvileges of the House, but the successful operation of the Act, in the five cases which had aheady been tried under its provisions was so generally acknowledged, that the bill was passed by a large majority 4 "This happy event," wrote Lord Chatham, "is a dawn of better times it is the last prop of Paihament · should it be lost in its passage, the legislature will fall into incurable contempt, and detestation of the nation" "The Act does honour to the statute-book, and will endear for ever the memory of the framer "5

This Act was passed on the eve of another general

<sup>1</sup> Walp Mem Goo III, 11

<sup>2</sup> Cavendish Deb , 1 518 3 Hatsell's Piec , n. 21

<sup>4 250</sup> to 122, Parl Hist, Avil. 1071, Fox Mem, 1 95, 193

Letter to Lord Shelburne, March 6th, 1774, Corresp iv 832

election, which does not appear — so far as evidence is accessible — to have been marked by so much conjuption as that of 1768 — But the value of boroughs had certainly not declined in the market, as Gatton was sold for 75,0001.

For a time this measure undoubtedly introduced a Its imperfect suc-

marked improvement in the judicature of the House cess of Commons. The disruption of the usual party combinations, at that period, was favourable to its success, and the exposure of former abuses discouraged their immediate renewal, in another form. But too soon it became evident, that corruption and party spirit had not been overcome 2 Crowds now attended the ballot, as they had previously come to the vote, - not to secure justice, but to further political interests. The party which attended in the greatest force, was likely to have the numerical majority of names, drawn for the committee From this list each side proceeded to strike thirteen of its political opponents, and the strongest thus secured a preponderance on the committee Nor was this all The ablest men, being most feared by their opponents, were almost invariably struck off,a process familiarly known as "knocking the brains out of the committee, " and thus the committee became at once partial and incompetent The members of the committee were sworn to do justice between the rival candidates, yet the circumstances under which they were notoriously chosen, their own party bias, and a lax conventional morality,-favoured by the obscurity and inconsistencies of the election law, and by the conflicting decisions of incapable tribunals,-led to this equivocal result . - that right was generally discovered to be on the side of that candidate, who professed the same political opinions as the majority of the commuttee. A Whig candidate had scant justice from a Tory committee, a Tory candidate pleaded in vain before a Whig committee

&lt;sup>1</sup> Lord Mahon's Hist, vi 27. Walpole's Mem, iv. 111 and n

Improved constitution of election committees

By these means, the majority of the House continued, - with less directness and certainty, and perhaps with less open scandal,—to nominate their own members, as they had done before the Grenville Act And for half a century, this system, with slight variations of procedure, was suffered to prevail In 1839, however, the ballot was at length superseded by Su Robert Peel's Act2, committees were reduced to six members. and nominated by an impartial body,-the general committee of elections The same principle of selection has since been adhered to in later Acts, with additional securities for impartiality, and the committee has been finally reduced to five members 8 The evil was thus greatly diminished, but still the sunster influence of party was not wholly overcome. In the nomination of election committees, one party or the other has necessarily had a majority of one, and though these tribunals have since been more able and judicial, their constitution and proceedings have too often exposed them to imputations of political bias

Distribution of places and pensions Such being the vices and defects of the electoral system,—what were then results upon the House of Commons? Representatives holding their seats by a general system of corruption, could scancely fail to be themselves corrupt. What they had bought, they were

These ouls were ably exposed. Deb, 3rd Sm. 1v 370, thtd, in the Report of the Committee on xive 576, Sm. a lv 370, thtd, in the Report of Contoverted Elections (Ma. C. Bullel, 1837—88, No. 445
 York C. SS, and 11 & 12
 York C. SS, No. 370, verted Elections, 1844, No. 570,

but too ready to sell And how glittering the prizes offered as the price of their services! Peerages, baronetcies, and other titles of honour, patronage and court favour for the rich,-places, pensions, and bribes for the needy All that the government had to bestow. they could command The rapid increase of honours1 attests the liberality with which political services were newarded; while contemporary memoirs and correspondence disclose the arts, by which many a peerage has been won.

From the period of the Revolution, places and Bestrained pensions have been regarded as the price of political by Panhadependence, and it has since been the steady policy of Parliament to restrain the number of placemen, entitled to sit in the House of Commons To William III fell the task of first working out the difficult problem of a constitutional government, and amongst his expedients for controlling his Parliaments, was that of a multiplication of offices The country party at once perceived the danger with which their newly-bought liberties were threatened from this cause, and endeavoured to avert it In 1693, the Commons passed a bill to prohibit all members hereafter chosen from accepting any office under the Crown , but the Lords rejected it In the following year it was renewed, and agreed to by both Houses, when the king refused his assent to it Later in his reign, however, this principle of disqualification was commenced, - the Commissioners of Revenue Boards being the first to whom it was applied 2 And at last, in 1700, it was enacted that after the accession of the House of Hanover, "no person who has an office or place of profit under the king, or receives a pension

&lt;sup>1</sup> See sum a, p 229 269 (Stamps), 11 & 12 Will III c 2
<sup>2</sup> 4 & S Will. & Mary, c 21 (Excess)

from the Crown, shall be capable of serving as a member of the House of Commons" This too stringent provision, however, was repealed,-before it came into operation2, -early in the reign of Anne It was, indeed, incompatible with the working of constitutional government, and if practically enforced, would have brought Parhament into hopeless conflict with the executive

Ante of Anne, George I,

By the Act of Settlement of that regen, other restrictions were introduced, far better adapted to correct the evils of corrupt influence. The holder of every new office created after the 25th of October, 1705, and every one enjoying a pension from the Crown, during pleasure, was incapacitated from sitting in Parliament. and members of the House of Commons accepting any old office from the Crown, were obliged to vacate their seats, though capable of re-electron 8 It was the object of this latter provision to submit the acceptance of office by a representative, to the approval of his constituents, a principle which,-notwithstanding several attempts to modify it,-has since been resolutely maintained by the legislature Restrictions were also imposed upon the multiplication of commissioners 4

Secret Pensions

At the commencement of the following reign, incapacity was extended to pensioners for terms of years 5: but as many pensions were then secretly granted, the law could not be put in force In the reign of George II several attempts were made to enforce it; but they all miscarried 6 Lord Halifax, in debating one of these bills, said that secret pensions were the worst form of

<sup>1 12 &</sup>amp; 18 Will III c 2.s 8 <sup>9</sup> 4 Anne, c 8, s 25 5 4 Anne, c 8

<sup>6</sup> Anne, c 7 5 1 Geo L c 56.

<sup>6</sup> No less than six bills were passed by the Commons, and 1ejected by the Lords, Parl. Hist. vin. 789, ibid, ix. 360, ibid, xi. 510, ibid, xii 501.

bubery "A bribe is given for a particular job, a pension is a constant, continual bribe" i Eally in the neign of Goorge III Mr Rose Fuller—who had been a stauch Whig,—was bought off by a secret pension of 5001 which he enjoyed for many years The cause of his apostasy was not discovered till after his death <sup>2</sup>

Still the policy of restricting the number of offices The Pace capable of being held by members of the House of Edd of Commons, was steadly pursued. In 1742 the Place Bill, which had been thince rejected by the Commons, and twice by the Lords, at length received the Royal assent <sup>3</sup> It was stated in a Lords protest, that two hundred appointments were then distributed amongst the members of the House of Commons <sup>4</sup> This Act added many offices to the list of disqualifications, but chiefly those of clerks and other subordinate officers of the public departments

By these neasures the excessive multiplication of Pieces and offices had been restrained, but in the reign of the gentled George III their number was still very considerable, and they were used,—almost without disguise,—as the means of obtaining parliamentary support. Horace Walpole has preserved a good example of the unblushing manner, in which bargains were made for the votes of members, in exchange for offices. Mr. Grenville wrote him a letter, proposing to appoint his nephew, Lord Orford, to the rangership of St James's and Hyde Parks. He said, "If he does choose it, I doubt not of his and his frend Boone's hearty assistance, and beheve I shall see you, too, much oftener in the House of Commons. This is offering you a bible, but "its such a one as one honest good-natured man may."

&lt;sup>1</sup> Paul Hist., vi 522 <sup>2</sup> Ahmon's Cou; n 8, Rockingham Mem , 1 79, n.

* 15 Geo II c 22.

* Loids' Protest, 1741, Paul Hist, xu 2

without offence, offer to another." As Walpole did not receive this communication with much warmth, and declined any participation in the bargain, payments due to him on account of his patent offices in the Exchequer, were stopped at the Treasury, for several months.

The Whig statesmen of this period, who were striving to reduce the influence of the Crown, were keenly alive to the means of corruption which a multiplicity of places still afforded "The great number of offices," said Lord Rockingham, "of more or less emolument, which are now tenable by parties sitting in Parliament, really operate like prizes in a lottery An interested man purchases a seat, upon the same principle as a person buys a lottery ticket The value of the ticket depends upon the quantum of prizes in the wheel "2 It was to nemove this evil, even more than for the sake of pecumary saving, that Mr Burke, in 1780, proposed to abolish thu ty-nine offices held by members of the House of Commons, and eleven held by peers. And by Lord Rockingham's Act for the regulation of the Civil List expenditure in 1782, several offices connected with the government and royal household were suppressed. which had generally been held by members of Parhament; and secret pensions were discontinued 8

In 1793, the Parliament of Ireland adopted the principles of the English act of Anne, and disqualified the holders of all offices under the Crown or Lord-Laeutenant, created after that time On the union with Leland, all the disqualifications for the Irish Parliament, were extended to the Parliament of the United Kingdom, and several new disqualifications were created, in reference to other Irish offices.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Nov. 21st, 1762, Walpole's Mem, m. 44, 50, 54 See also Mem, 1. 213—216 stp. 4, 215. 44 Geo, III. c. 52 44 Geo, III. c. 52

The general scheme of official disfranchisement was Further now complete but the jealousy of Parhament was disqualifications still shown by the disqualification of new officers annomted by Acts of Parliament. So constant has been this policy, that upwards of one hundred statutes, still in force, contain clauses of disqualification, and many similar statutes have been passed, which have since expired, or have been repealed 1 The result of this vigilant jealousy, has been a great reduction of the number of placemen sitting in the House of Commons In the first Parliament of George I there had been two hundred and seventyone members holding offices, pensions, and sinecures In the first Parhament of George II there were two hundred and fifty-seven, in the first Parliament of George IV there were but eighty-nine, exclusive of officers in the army and navy 2 The number of placemen sitting in the House of Commons, has been further reduced by the abolition and consolidation of offices. and in 1833 there were only sixty members holding civil offices and pensions, exclusive of eighty-three holding naval and military commissions 8

The policy of disqualification has been maintained to Judicial the present time. The English judges had been ex-officers disqualified cluded from the House of Commons, by the law of Parliament In the interests of justice, as well as on grounds of constitutional policy, this exclusion was extended to their brethren of the Scottish bench, in the reign of George II.4, and to the judges of the courts in Ireland, in the reign of George IV.5 In 1840, the same punciple was applied to the Judge of the Adminaty Court All the new judges in equity were disqualified by the Acts under which they were constituted. The solitary judge still enjoying the capacity of sitting in the House of Commons, is the Master of the Rolls. In 1853, a Bill was introduced to withdraw thus exceptional privilege, but it was defeated by a masterly speech of Mr Macaulay?

 $<sup>^1</sup>$  Author's Pamphlet on the Consistence of the Electron Laws,  $^2$  Report on Membess in Office,  $^2$  Report on Returns made by Membess, 1822 (642), 1823 (669),  $^2$  7 (6eo II. c. 10

These various disquahfications were deemed necessary for securing the independence of Parliament, and the policy is still recognised, when the dangers they were designed to avert, are less to be apprehended. It is true that independence has been purchased at the cost of much intellectual eminence, which the House of Commons could ill afford to spare, but this sacrifice was due to constitutional freedom, and it has been wisely made.

But the independence of Pailiament was formerly corrupted by gooser expedients than places and pensions Vulgar bribes were given,—directly and indirectly,—for political support. Our Parliamentary history has been tainted with this disgrace, from the reign of Charles II far into that of George III. That Charles, himself unscrupulous and corrupt, should have resorted to bubery, is natural enough. His was a debased ragn, in which all forms of corruption flourished.

Members were then first exposed to the temptation of pecumary bribes In the reigns of the Tudors and the first two Stnarts, prerogative luad been too strong to need the aid of such persuasion; but after prerogative

Much to the pensonal regret of long distinguished himself all who were acquainted with that "Judges! Exclusion Bill, June emuent man, Dr Lushington, who lost the seat in which he had so Sea, exercise 1984. Hansard's Deb., 3id had been judely shaken by the overthrow of Charles I, it was sought to support the influence of the Crown, by the subtle arts of corruption Votes which were no longer to be controlled by fear, were purchased with gold James II., agan, - secure of a servile Parliament, and bent upon ruling once more by prerogative,-disdamed the meaner arts of bribery 1

The Revolution, however favourable to constitutional liberty, revived and extended this scandal, and the circumstances of the times, unhappily favoured its development The prerogative of the Crown had been still further limited, the power and activity of Parliament being proportionately increased, while no means had yet been taken to ensure its responsibility to the people A majority of the House of Commons, - beyond the reach of public opinion, -not accountable to its constatuencies. - and debating and voting with closed doors,-held the political destinies of England at its mercy The Constitution had not yet provided worther means of influence and restraint, and William III, though personally averse to the base practices of Charles II , was forced to permit their use His reign, otherwise conductive to freedom and national greatness, was discraceful to the character of the statesmen, and to the public virtue of that age 2

The practice of direct bribery notoriously continued in the three succeeding reigns, and if not proved by the records of Parliament, was attested by contemporary writers, and by the complaints openly made of its existence Under the administration of Sir Robert

Burnet's Own Time, 1 626
 Pall Hist, v. 807, 840, Burnet's Own Time, u 144, 145
 Pall, 687, 546, u 148, 305, net's Own Time, u 144, 145
 427, 478, 545, and 551, Com See Lord Macqulay's instructive Journ, xi 331, May 2nd, 1995 sketch of the Rise and Progress

Walpole, it was reduced to an organised system, by which a majority of the Honse of Commons was long retained in subjection to the minister 1 It is time, that after his fall, his enemies failed in proving their charges against him: but the entire strength of the court, the new ministry, and the House of Lords, was exerted to screen him. The witnesses refused to answer questions, and the Lords declined to pass a bill of indemmity, which would have removed the ground of their refusal 2 | Nor must it be overlooked that, however notorious corruption may be, it is of all things the most difficult of moof.

This system was continued by his successors, throughout the leign of George II , and is believed to have been brought to perfection, under the administration of Mr Henry Pelham

In approaching the reign of George III., it were well if no traces could be found of the continued existence of this system, but unhappily the carly part of this reign presents some of its worst examples Lord Bute, being resolved to maintain his power by the corrupt arts of Sir Robert Walpole, secured, by the promise of a peerage, the aid of Walpole's experienced agent, Mr Henry Fox, in carrying them out with success.8 The office entrusted to him was familiarly known as "the management of the House of Commons"

In October, 1762, Mr Grenville had impressed upon Lord Bute the difficulties of carrying on the business of the House of Commons, "without being authorised Debates, Lods and Commons, Inspury, Paul ILtst, voi 448 & sty. 1743, on mothers for the removed.

 Ricapi of Communities of Communities of Communities of Sir. R Walpole, Paul Ilist, au quury, 1749, Paul Ilist, au 1026, 1027—1308, Ocac's Mem of Sir. 7928, Ocac's Mem, of Sir. R. Walpole, 1641, 719, Debates pole, 1711 and appointment of Communities of * Bookingham Mem, 1 127

to talk to the members of that House upon their several claims and pretensions "  $^{\rm I}$   $\,$  And these difficulties were effectually overcome

Horace Walpole relates a startling tale of the purchase of votes by Mr Fox, in December, 1762, in. support of Lord Bute's prehminaries of peace savs, "A shop was publicly opened at the Pay Office, whither the members flocked, and received the wages of their venality in bank-bills, even to so low a sum as 2001. for their votes on the treaty 25,0001, as Martin, Secretary of the Treasury, afterwards owned, were issued in one morning, and in a single fortnight, a vast majority was purchased to approve the peace 12" Lord Stanhope, who is inclined wholly to reject this circumstantial story, admits that Mr Fox was the least scrupulous of Walpole's pupils, and that the majority was otherwise unaccountable The account is probably exaggerated, but the character of Mr Fox and his Parliamentary associates is not repugnant to its probability, nor does it stand alone A suspicious ciicumstance, in confirmation of Horace Walpole, has been brought to light Among Mr Grenville's papers has been preserved a statement of the secret service money from 1761 to 1769, whence it appears that in the year ending 25th October, 1762, 10,000l had been disbursed to Mr Martin, Secretary to the Treasury, and in the following vear, to which the story refers, no less than 41,000l4

The general expenditue for secret service, during Loid Bute's peniod, also exhibits a remarkable excess, as compared with other years. In the year ending 25th October, 1761, the secret service money had amounted to 58,000\(Limes\) Lord Bute came into office on the 29th May, 1762, and in this year, ending 25th October, it rose at once to 82,168l In the next year, — Lord Bute having retured in April, — it fell to 61,000l In 1764, it was reduced to 36,837l, and in 1765, to 29,3744l

Grenville Papers, 1 488 Walp Mem Geo III, 1 199

Loid Mahon's Hist, v 15 Gronville Papers, in 144

The Grenville Ministry distributed bribes or gratuities with less profusion than Lord Bute, yet with so hitle restraint, that a donation to a member of Parliament appears to have been regarded as a customary compliment. It might be offered without offence if declined, an apology was felt to be due to the minister. In the Grenville Papers we find a characteristic letter from Lord Say and Sele, which exemplifies the relations of the minister with his Parliamentary supporters.

" London, Nov 26th, 1763

"Honoured Sir,—I am very much obliged to you for that freedom of conveise you this morning indulged in in, which I prize more than the lucrative advantage I then received To show the sincentry of my goods (parlon, Sir, the perhaps over miceness of my disposition), I return inclosed the bill for 3001 you favoured me with, as good manners would not permit my refusal of it, when tendered by you

"PS—As a fiee horse wants no spur, so I stand in need of no inducement oi douceur, to lend my small assistance to the king, or his friends in the present administration"<sup>2</sup>

Mr Gienville, however, complained,—and apparently with justice,—"that the secret service money was by a great deal less than under any other minister"<sup>3</sup>

&lt;sup>1</sup> There is an obscurity in these and from the other 394,5077 The accounts, but it seems as if the sected service monory had been derived from different sources, the amount <sup>9</sup> Grenville Papers, in 145

paid from one source, between 3 Ibid, 144.

Throughout the administration of Lord North, the Under purchase of votes in Parliament, by direct pecuniary Lord bribes, was still a common practice The king's complicity,—always suspected,—is now beyond a doubt Writing to Lord North on the 1st March, 1781, His Majesty said - "Mr Robinson sent me the list of the speakers last night, and of the very good majority I have this morning sent him 60001, to be placed to the same purpose as the sum transmitted on the 21st August 1" No other conclusion can be drawn from this letter, than that the king was in the habit of transmitting money, to secure majorities for the minister, who was then fighting his battles in the House of Commons

The system of bubery did not long survive the Subsequen ministry of Lord North 2 It may not have wholly delino of the system died out, and has probably been since resorted to, on rare and exceptional occasions But the powerful and popular administration of Mr Pitt did not need such support The Crown had triumphed over parties,-its influence was supreme, - and Mr Pitt himself, however profuse in the distribution of honours to his adherents, was of too lofty a character, to encourage the baseness of his meaner followers

<sup>1</sup> King's Letters to Lord North, Lord Brougham's Works, in 157 Mr Robinson, as Secretary to the Treasury, had the management of the House of Commons, and was the depository of the Line rouge, supposed to contain the names of members retained by ministers -Wravall Mem, n 225

2 Mi Hallam says that the piactice of direct bribery of Members of Parliament "18 generally sup-posed to have ceased about the termination of the American Wai " -Const Hist, 11 428

M1 William Smith, one of the oldest members of the House of Commons, related the following anecdote of his own time - A gentleman, being at Sir Benjamin Hammett's Bank, heard a Member, one of Lord North's friends, ask to have a 5001 bill "broken," which was done, and upon the applicant leaving the bank, Su B Hammett saw a cover lying on the floor, which he picked up and put into his friend's hand, without comment It was addressed to the member, "with Lord North's compliments"

Another instrument of corruption was found, at the beginning of this reign, in the raising of money for the public service, by loans and lotteries This form of bribery, though less direct, was more capable of proof A bribe could be given in secret, the value of sciip was notorious In March, 1763, Lord Bute contracted a loan of three millions and a half, for the public service; and having distributed shares among his friends, the scim immediately rose to a premium of 11 per cent in the market! So enormous a miscalculation of the terms upon which a loan could be negotiated, is scarcely to be reconciled with honesty of purpose, and, according to the practice of that time, the minister was entirely free from control in the distribution of the shares Here the country sustained a loss of 385,000/. and the minister was openly charged with having enuched his political adherents, at the public expense, The bank-bills of Mr Fox had been found so persuasive, that corruption was applied on a still larger scale, in order to secure the power of the minister. The participation of many members, in the profits of this impurtous loan could not be concealed : and little pains were taken to denv 1t.1

The success of this expedient was not likely to be soon forgotten. Stock-jobbing became the fashion, and many members of Pahlament were notoriously concerned in it Horace Walpole, the chief chionicle of these scandals, states that, in 1767, sixty members were implicated in such transactions, and even the Chancellor of the Exchequer hunself. Another contemporary, Sir George Colebrooke, gives an account quite as circumstantial, of the monstious corruption of the time. He says, "the Duke of Grafton gave a dimer to several of the principal men in the city, to settle the loan. Mr. Townshend came in his nightgown, and after dunner, when the terms were settled, and every one present wished to introduce some friend on the list of subscribers, he pretended to cast up the sums already subscribed, said the loan was full, huddled up his papers, got into a chan, and returned home, reserving to himself, by this manœuvic, a large share in the loan.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Paul.Hast, xv 1805, Adolphus, No 42, Lord Mahon's Hist, v 20 1111, History of the late Minority, 107, "The North Briton," 428.

A few years later, similar practices were exposed Lotteres in another form Lotteries were then a favourite source of revenue, and it appeared from the lists of subscribers in 1769 and 1770, that shares had been allotted to several members of Parliament. On the 231d of April, 1771, Mr Seymour moved for the list of persons who had subscribed to the lotteries of that year, alleging that it appeared from the lists of 1769, that twenty thousand tickets had been disposed of to members of Parliament, which sold at a premium of nearly 2l each. His motion was refused 2. On the 25th April, Mr Cornwall moved to prohibit any member from receiving more than twenty tickets. He stated that he was "certainly informed," that fifty members of Parliament had each subscribed for five hundred tickets, which would realise a profit of 1000%, and secure the minister fifty votes His motion also was rejected 8

Again, in 1781, the very circumstances of Lord Bute's Lord flagitious loan, were repeated under Lord North. A North's ana, 1781

Cited in Walpole's Mem, in No. 120, Chathan's Coiresp, iv. 148, n, Pail Hist, xvii. 174 Hist, xvii. 185

loan of 12,000,000l was then contracted, to defray the cost of the disastrous American war, of which lottery tickets formed a part. Its terms were so favourable to the subscribers, that suddenly the scrip, or omnium, rose nearly 11, per cent 1 The munster was assailed with injurious reproaches, and his conduct was repeatedly denounced in Parliament as wilfully conjupt. These charges were not made by obscure men; but by the Marguess of Rockingham, Mr Fox, Mr Burke, Mr Byng, Sn G Savile, and other emment members of Opposition It was computed by Mr Fox, that a profit of 900,000l would be derived from the loan, and by others, that half the loan was subscribed for by members of the House of Commons Lord Rockingham said, "the loan was made merely for the purpose of corrupting the Parliament to support a wicked, impolitic, and rumous war" Mr Fox declared, again and again, that a large sum had been placed in the "hands of the minister to be granted as douceurs to members of that . as a means of procuring and continuing a majority in the House of Commons, upon every occasion, and to give strength and support to a bad administration "2

The worst feature of this form of corruption, was its excessive and extravagant cost to the country If members of Parliament were to be bribed at all, bank-notes, judiciously distributed, were far cheaper than improvident loans. Lord Bute had purchased a majority, on the preliminaries of peace, with thirty or forty thousand pounds Lord North's experiment laid a buithen upon the people, of nearly a million. It was bad enough that the representatives of the people should be corrupted, and to pay so high a price for then commutation was a cruel aggravation of the wrong

<sup>1</sup> Sir P J Clerke, on the 8th Rockingham Mem, n 437, Lord March, and it had isen from 9 to J Russell's Life of Fox, i 235— II in the Alley that day Loid 241 Wiaxall's Mem ii 360-375 North said it had only lisen to 9, and Among the subscribers to this loan Notice should these only same Among an substances to same form that fallen again to 7‡ Lord Rock—were seven members for 70,000°, updam estimated it at 10 per cent others for 60,000°, and one for 3 behates in the Commons, 7th, 100,000°, but the greaten number 8th, 12th, and 14th March, and being heldens of scrip only, dul not in the Loids, 21st March, 1781, appear in the list—Wrazall Mem, Pail History, xxi 1334—1386, n 367.

In 1782, Lord North, in raising another loan, did Lord not venture to repeat these scandals, but disappointed loan, 1782 his friends by a new system of close subscriptions This arrangement did not escape animadversion, but it was the germ of the modern form of contracts, by sealed tenders 1 Mr Pitt had himself condemned the former Disconfisystem of jobbing loans and lotteries, and when he manes of the system commenced his series of loans for the French revolu- by Mr Pitt tionary war in 1793, he took effectual means to discontimue it That the evil had not been exaggerated, may be inferred from the views of that sagacious statesman, as expounded by his biographer and friend Dr Tombine Mr Pitt "having, while in opposition, objected to the practice of his predecessors in distributing beneficial shares of loans and lottery tickets, under the market price, among their private friends, and the Parliamentary supporters of the Government, adopted a new plan of contracting for loans and lotteries by means of sealed proposals from different persons, which were opened in the presence of each other, and while this competition ensured to the public, the best terms individuals, and increasing ministerial influence "2 One other form of Parliamentary corruption yet Contracwhich could be obtained under existing circumstances. it cut off a very improper source of showing favour to remains to be noticed. Lucrative contracts for the public service, necessarily increased by the American war, were found a convenient mode of enriching political supporters. A contract to supply 1um or beef for the navy, was as great a prize for a member, as a share in a loan or lottery This species of reward was particularly acceptable to the commercial members of the House Not were its attractions confined to the members who enjoyed the contracts Constituents being allowed to participate in their profits, were zealous in supporting government candidates Here was another source of influence, for which again the people paid too dearly Heavy as their burthens were becoming, they were increased by the costly and improvident contracts, which this system of Pai hamentary jobbing encouraged. The cost of bribery in this form, was even greater and more indefinite than that of loans and lotteries. In the latter case, there were some limits to the premium on scrip, which was public and patent to all the world, but who could estimate the profits of a contract loosely and ignorantly,-not to say corruptly-entered into, and executed without adequate securities for its proper fulfilment? These evils were notorious, and efforts were not wanting to correct them

Parl Hist, xxii, 1056, Wiax-2 Lafe of Patt, m 533 all's Mem , 320

In 1779 Sr Philip Jennings Clerke obtained leave to bring in a bill to disqualify contractors from sitting in Parliament, except where they obtained contracts at a public bilding, but, on the 11th of Maich, the commitment of the bill was negatived <sup>1</sup> Again, in February 1780, Sn Philip inewed his motion, and succeeded in passing his bill through the Commons, without opposition, but it was rejected by the Lords on the second reading 1 In 1781 it was brought forward a third time, but was then lost in the House of Commons 2

&lt;sup>1</sup> Pail, Hist, vr 123-129

Meanwhile, Lord North's administration was falling. the Opposition were pledged to diminish the influence of the Crown, and to further the cause of economic reform, and in 1782, Sir Philip was able to bring in his bill, and carry the second reading 3 In committee, Mr Fox mtroduced clauses, which omitted the exception in favour of contracts obtained at a public bidding, and extended it to existing as well as future contracts Immediately afterwards, the Rockingham ministry coming into office, adopted a measure so consonant with their own policy, and, under such auspices. it was at length passed 4 It was another legislative condemnation of corrupt influences in Parliament

In weighing the evidence of Parliamentary corrup- Abuses tion, which is accessible to us, allowance must be made by Parlia for the hostility of many of the witnesses Charges ment were made against the government of the day, by its bitterest opponents, and may have been exaggerated by the hard colouring of party But they were made by men of high character and political eminence, and so generally was their truth acknowledged, that every abuse complained of was ultimately condemned by Parliament Were all the measures for restraining corruption and undue influence groundless? Were the

&lt;sup>1</sup> Pail Hist, xxi 414

&lt;sup>2</sup> Ibid, 1390 <sup>3</sup> Pail Hist, xxii 1214, 1335, 1356 Debates, 19th March, 15th and 17th April, 1st and 27th May, 1782 The Bill contained an excep-

The Diff commence at except some and meaning and seately tron in favour of persons subscribing to be chied upon, though it was to a public loan. It was said, however, that the lean was a mose campagenes engine of influence than queues engine of influence than disability in 1865. contracts, and ultimately the exception was omitted, " it being generally understood that a separate Bill should be brought in for that purpose," which, however, was never done. This matter, as stated in the debates, is exceedingly obseme and meonsistent, and sencely evils sought to be corrected imaginary? The historian can desire no better evidence of contemporary evils, than the judgment of successive Parhaments, -- pronounced again and again, and ratified by posterity 1 The wisdom of the legislature averted the rum of the constitution, which the philosophical Montesquieu had predicted, when he said, "Il périra lorsque la puissance legislative sera plus corrompue que l'exécutrice." 2 Such was the state of society in the first years of the reign of George III that the vices of the government received little correction from public opinion A corrupt system of government represented but too faithfully, the prevalent corruption of society Men of the highest rank openly moted in drunkenness, gambling, and debauchery · the clergy were indifferent to religion the middle classes were coarse, ignorant, and sensual, and the lower classes brutalised by neglect, poverty, and evil examples The tastes and habits of the age were low, its moral and intellectual standard was debased All classes were wanting in refinement, and nearly all in education. Here were abounding materials for venal senators, greedy place-hunters, and corrupt electors

State of secasty early in the reign

How popu-f kept alive

Having viewed the imperfections of the representalu prin-emles were twe system, and the various forms of corruption by which the constitution was formerly disfigured, we pause to inquire how popular principles, statesmanship, and public virtue were kept alive, amid such adverse

<sup>1</sup> In painting the public vices of his age, Cowper did not omit to stigmatise, as it deserved, its political corruption "But when a country (one that I could name), [shame. In prostatution sinks the sense of influences 21 The country was great and glorious, and its history, - though stained with many blots, - is such as Englishmen may justly contemplate with pride The people, if emoving less freedom than in later times. were yet the freest people in the world Then laws. if inferior to modern jurisprudence, did not fall short of the enlightenment of the age, in which Parliament designed them How are these contrasts to be explained and reconciled 9 How were the people saved from misgovernment? What were the antidotes to the baneful abuses which prevailed 9 In the first place, parhamentary government attracted the ablest men to the service of the state Whether they owed their seats to the patronage of a peer, or to the suffrages of then fellow-countrymen, they equally enlightened Parhament by their eloquence, and guided the national councils by their statesmanship. In the next place, the representation,—limited and anomalous as it was, comprised some popular elements, and the House of Commons, in the worst times, still professed its responsibility to the people Nor can it be denied that the small class, by whom a majority of the House of Commons was returned, were the most instructed and enlightened in the country, and as Englishmen, were generally true to principles of freedom.

When infamous Venality, grown Writes on his bosom, 'to be let an sold " Table Tall.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Livre xi. c. 6.

Two other causes, which exercised a wholesome restraint upon Parhament and the governing class, are to be found in the divisions of party,—finely called by Sir Bulwer Lytton "the sinews of freedom,"—and the growing influence of the press the value of the ruling party may sometimes have been to repress.

&quot;I "Of all ingenious instruments and hired, and a few hold and able of despotism," sud Sydney Smith, men, by their have specifies, make in I most commend a popular as—the people believe they are free "—sembly where the majority are paid. Mem, in. 214

· hberty, the party in opposition were forced to rely upon popular principles, and pledged to maintain them, at least for a time, when they succeeded to nower Party again sumplied, in some degree, the place of intelligent public opinion. As yet the great hody of the people had neither knowledge nor influence, but those who enjoyed political power, were encouraged by their rivalnes and ambition, not less than by their patriotism, to embrace those principles of good government, which steadily made then way in our laws and institutions Had all parties combined against popular rights, nothing short of another revolution could have overthrown them But as they were divided and opposed, the people obtained extended liberties, before they were in a position to wrest them from their rulers, by means of a free representation.

Meanwhile the press was gradually creating a more elevated public opinion, to which all parties were obliged to defer. It was long, however, before that great political agent performed its office worthily Before the press can be instructive, there must be enlightenment, and public spirit among the people it takes its colour from society, and reflects its prevailing vices. Hence, while flagrant abuses in the government were tolerated by a corrupt society, the press was venal,—teeming with scurritions libels and factious falsehoods, in the interests of rival parties,—and disfigured by all the faults of a deprived political morality. Let us be thankful that principles of liberty and public victue were so strong, as constantly to advance in society in the press, and in the government of the country.

The glarmg defects and vices of the representative system, which have now been exposed,—the restricted and unequal franchise, the bribery of a limited elec-

total body, and the corruption of the representatives . themselves, - formed the strongest arguments for parhamentary reform Some of them had been partially corrected, and some had been meffectually exposed and denounced, but the chief evil of all, demanded a bolder and more hazardous remedy The theory of an equal representation,-at no time very perfect,-had, in the course of ages, been entirely subverted. Decayed boroughs, without inhabitants, - the absolute property of noblemen, - and populous towns without electors, returned members to the House of Commons, but great manufacturing cities, distinguished by their industry, wealth, and intelligence, were without representatives

Schemes for partially rectifying these inequalities were proposed at various times, by statesmen of very different opinions. Lord Chatham was the first to Lord Chatadvocate reform Speaking, in 1766, of the borough ham's scheme of representation, he called it "the rotten part of our con-reform, stitution;" and said "It cannot continue a century If it does not drop, it must be amputated "1 In 1770, he 14th May suggested that a third member should be added to every county, "in order to counterbalance the weight of corrupt and venal boroughs "2 Such was his opinion of the necessity of a measure of this character, that he said. "Before the end of this century, either the ' Parliament will reform itself from within, or be reformed with a vengeance from without"8 The next scheme Mr was that of a very notable politician, Mr Wilkes scheme, More comprehensive than Lord Chatham's, - it was 1776.

Debates on the Address, Janu- of a Scotch Act at the Revolution.

or a Scotten Act as the revolution.

ary, 1706

Walpole's Mem , nv 58, Chatham's Corresp , nv 167, where he supports his views by the piecedent

Pall List, vvii 228, n

Pall List, vvii 228, n

fiamed to meet, more directly, the evils complained of In 1776, he moved for a bill to give additional members to the Mctiopolis, and to Middlesex, Yorkshire, and other large counties, to distanchise the iotten boroughs, and add the electors to the county constituency, and lastly, to enfianchise Manchester, Leeds, Sheffield, Binmingham, and "other rich populous trading towns". His scheme, indeed, comprised all the leading principles of paihamentary reform, which were advocated for the next fifty years without success, and have been sanctioned within our own time

Duke of Richmond's Bill, 1780

The next measure for reforming the Commons, was brought forward by a peer On the 3rd June, 1780, m the midst of Lord George Gordon's nots, the Duke of Richmond presented a bill for establishing annual parliaments, universal suffiage, and equal electoral districts 2 It was reeeded without a division

Other schemes of reform, 1780 districts. It was rejected without a division. Nor was the Duke's extravagant proposal an isolated suggestion of his own. Extreme changes were at this time populai,—embiacing annual parlaments, the extinction of rotten boroughs, and universal suffrage. The graver statesmen, who were favourable to improved representation, discountenanced all such proposals, likely to endanger the more practicable schemes of economic reform by which they were then endeavouring,—with every prospect of success,—to purify Panhament, and reduce the influence of the Crown. The petitiones by whom they were supported, piayed also for a more equal representation of the people, but it was deemed prudent to postpone for a time, the agitation of that question.

The disgraceful riots of Lord George Gordon, ien-

 <sup>1 21</sup>st Meach, 1776, Parl Hist, xvin 1287 The motion was negative without a division.
 Ann Reg, xxiv. 140, 104, Rockingham Moon, 11, 305, 411

dered this time unfavourable for the discussion of any political changes The Whig party were charged with instigating and abetting these riots, just as, at a later period, they became obnoxious to imputations of Jacobinism The occasion of the king's speech at the end of the session of 1780, was not lost by the tottering government of Lord North. His Majesty warned the people against "the hazard of innovation," and artfully connected this waining, with a reference to "rebellious insurrections to resist or to reform the laws "1

Among the more moderate schemes discussed at this period, by the temperate supporters of parliamentary reform, was the addition of one hundred county members to the House of Commons It was objected to, however, by some of the leading Whigs, "as being prejudicial to the democratical part of the Constitution, by throwing too great a weight into the scale of the aristocracy "2

Mr Pitt was now commencing his great career, and Mr Pitt's his early youth is memorable for the advocacy of a motion for measure, which his renowned father had approved His 1782 first motion on this subject was made in 1782, during the Rockingham administration The time was well chosen, as that ministry was honourably distinguished by its exertions for the punification of Panhament On the 7th May, after a call of the House, he introduced the subject in a speech, as wise and temperate as it was able. In analysing the state of the representation, he described the Treasury and other nomination boroughs, without property, population, or trade, and the boroughs which had no property or stake in the country but then votes, which they sold to the highest bidder The Nabob of Arcot, he said, had seven or eight members in that House and might not a foreign State in enmity with this country, by means of such boroughs, have a party there? He concluded by moving for a committee of inquity He seems to have been induced to adopt this course, in consequence of the difficulties he had experienced in obtaining the agreement of the friends of reform, to any specific proposal 1 This motion was superseded by reading the order of the day, by a majority of twenty only 2

Paul Hist, xxvi. 767.

* Letter of Duke of Postland, Rockingham Mem , n 412,

Mr Pitt's resolutions. May 7th, 1783.

Again, in 1783, while in opposition to the Coalition ministry. Mr Pitt renewed his excitions in the same cause. His position had, in the mean time, been strengthened by numerous petitions, with 20,000 signatures 8

He no longer proposed a committee of inquiry, but came forward with three distinct resolutions -1st. That effectual measures ought to be taken for preventing bubery and expense at elections 2nd, That when the majointy of voters for any borough should be convicted of corruption, before an election committee, the borough should be disfranchised, and the unbibed minority entitled to vote for the county 31d, That an addition should be made to the knights of the shire, and members for the metropolis In support of his resolutions. he attributed the disasters of the American war to the corrupt state of the House of Commons, and the secret influence of the Crown, which, he said, "was sapping the very foundation of liberty, by corruption " Universal suffrage he condemned, and the distranchisement of "rotten boroughs" he as vet shrank from proposing 4

Ann Reg, xxv 181
 had been brought into the House by the Gleck, and had on the floor 1416, Fen Henry, 1821—2
 All the petators which had been presented for the last month, Mam, 11.79, Wixax Mem, 11. 400

Before M1 Pitt had occasion again to express his Yorkshine sentiments, he had been called to the head of affairs, and Jan 16th, was carrying on his memorable contest with the Coahtion On the 16th January, 1784, Mr Duncombe presented a petition from the freeholders of Yorkshire. praying the House to take into serious consideration the madequate state of the representation of the people. Mr Pitt supported it, saying, that he had been confirmed in his opinions in favour of reform, by the recent conduct of the Opposition. "A temperate and moderate reform," he said, "temperately and moderately pursued, he would at all times, and in all situations, be ready to promote to the utmost of his power." At the same time, he avowed that his cabinet were not united in favour of any such measure, and that he despaired of seeing any cabinet unanimous in the cause In this opinion Mr Fox signified his concurrence, but added, that M1 Pitt had scarcely introduced one person into his cabinet, who would support his views in regard to parliamentary reform <sup>1</sup>

The sincenty of Mr Pitt's assurances was soon to be Mr Pitt's tested In the new Parliament he found himself supported by a powerful majority, and he enjoyed at once the confidence of the king and the favour of the people Upon one question only, was he powerless To his measure of parliamentary reform, the king was adverse <sup>2</sup>,—his cabinet were indifferent or unfriendly, and his followers in the House of Commons, could not be brought to vote in its favour. The Tories were generally opposed to it, and even a large portion of the Whigs, including the Duke of Portland and Lord Fitzwilham, failed to lend it their supports <sup>3</sup> Public feelings had not yet been awakened to the necessity of reform, and the legislature was so constituted, that any effective scheme was hopeless

&lt;sup>1</sup> Parl Hist, xxiv 347 <sup>2</sup> See supra, p 76

&lt;sup>3</sup> Lord J Russell's Lafe of Fox,

In the first session of the new Parliament he was not prepared with any measure of his own, but he spoke and voted in favour of a motion of Mr. Alderman Sawbridge, and promised that, in the next session, he should be ready to bring the question forward himself 1 He redeemed this pledge, and on the 18th April, 1785, moved for leave to introduce a Bill "to amend the representation of the people of England, in Parliament" Having proved, by numerous references to history, that the representation had frequently been changed, according to the varying circumstances of the country; that many decayed boroughs had ceased to return members to Parliament, while other boroughs had been raised or restored to that privilege, he proposed that seventytwo members then returned by thirty-six decayed boroughs should be distributed among the counties and the Metropolis But this part of his scheme was accompanied by the startling proposal, that these boloughs should not be disfranchised, except with the consent of their proprietors, who were to receive compensation from the State, amounting to a million sterling! He further proposed to purchase the exclusive rights of ten corporations, for the benefit of their fellow-citizens, and to obtain by the same means, the surrender of the right of returning members from four small boroughs, whose members could be transferred to populous towns By these several means, a hundred seats were to be re-distributed enlargement of the county constituency, by the addition of copyholders to the freeholders, formed another part of his plan It was estimated that by this change, and by the enfranchisement of great towns, a total addition of nmety-nine thousand would be made to the electoral body The portion of this scheme most open to objection was that of compensating the proprietors of bo-1 oughs, and he admitted that it " was a tender part, but at the same time it had become a necessary evil, if any reform was to take place" It seems indeed, that not hoping to convince those interested in the existing state of the representation, of the expediency of reform, he had sought to purchase then support. The boroughs which were always in the market, he proposed to buy, on behalf of the State, and thus to secure purity, through the instruments of corruption. Such a sagrifice of principle to expediency may have been necessary. but it did not save his scheme of reform from utter failure His motion for leave to bring in the bill, was negatived by a majority of seventy-four 1

Paul Hist, xxiv. 975.

As this was the last occasion on which Mr Pitt advo- Mr Pitt's cated the cause of parliamentary reform, his sincerity, even at that time, has been called in question. He could scarcely have hoped to carry this measure, but its failure was due to causes beyond his control To have staked his power as a minister, upon the issue of a measure fifty years in advance of the public opinion of his day,-and which he had no power to force upon Parliament,-would have been the act of an enthusiast. rather than a statesman The blame of his subsequent maction in the cause was shared by the Whigs, who, for several years, consented to its entire oblivion

In the five ensuing years of Mr. Pitt's prosperous ad- Mr. Flood's ministration, the word "Reform" was scarcely whis- motion, pered in Parliament At length, in 1790, Mr Flood moved for a bill to amend the representation of the people. His plan was to add one hundred members to the House of Commons, to be elected by the resident householders of every county. Mr. Pitt, on this occasion, professed himself to be as firm and zealous a friend as ever to parlamentary reform; but could not assent to Mr. Flood's motion, which was superseded by the advoumment of the House.

Ayes 174, Noes 248 Patl. Hist, xxx. 482 — 475, Tomline's Life of Pitt, n 41

" Friends of the People" Meanwhile, the cause of parhamentary reform had been advocated by several political associations, and more particularly by the "Friends of the People". This society embraced several men eminent in politics and literature, and twenty-eight members of Parhament, of whom Mr Grey and Mr Erskine took the lead. It was agreed amongst them, that the subject should again be pressed upon the attention of Parhament.

Mr Grey's notice, 30th April, 1792 Parliament And, accordingly, on the 30th of April, 1792, Mr. Grev gave notice of a motion, in the ensuing session, for an inquiry into the representative system.2 A few years earlier, the cause of reform,-honestly supported by moderate men of all parties,-might have prevailed, but the perils of the time had now become too grave to admit of its fair discussion That ghastly revolution had burst forth in France, which for two generations, was destined to repress the hberties of England Mr. Pitt avowed that he still retained his opinion of the propriety of parliamentary reform; but was persuaded that it could not then be safely tried. He saw no prospect of success, and great danger of anarchy and confusion in the attempt "This is not a time," said he, "to make hazardous experiments." He had

Paul Hist, xxvm. 452
M Speaker Addington permitted a debate to ause on this splic.—Lord Science wholly madmissible.—Lord Science Wiley Lyfe, 1 88, occasion, which, according to the taken his stand against revolutionary principles, and every question with which they could be associated My Burke, the honoured reformer of an earlier period, and m another cause 1, and many respected members of his party, henceforth supported the minister, and ranged themselves with the opponents of 1eform A period was commencing, not only hostile to all change, but repressive of freedom of opinion, and the power of Mr Pitt, as the champion of order against democracy, was absolute 2

On the 6th of May, 1793, Mr Grey brought forward Mr Grey's the motion, of which he had given notice in the previous session First he presented a long and elaborate netition from the society of the Friends of the People, exposing the abuses of the electoral system, and alleging various grounds for parliamentary reform petition having been read, Mr Grev proceeded to move that it be referred to the consideration of a committee Like Mr. Pitt, on a former occasion,-and probably for the same reasons, -he made no specific proposal; but contented himself with arguments against the existing system A more unsuitable time for such a motion could not have been found. The hornors of the French revolution had lately reached then chmax, in the execution of the King many British subjects had avowed then sympathy with revolutionary principles the country was at war with the French republic the Whig party had been broken up, and the great body of the people were alarmed for the safety of their institutions At such a time, the most moderate proposals were discountenanced, and after two mights' debate, Mr Grev's v motion found only forty-one supporters 8

&lt;sup>1</sup> Mr Buike had neves supported palhamentary reform <sup>2</sup> Pail Hist, xxx 787—925, Ayes 41, Noes 232, Lad J Rusline's Life of Pitt, in 322 349

Mr Grey's motion, 1797

After such discouragement, and under circumstances so adverse. Mr Grev did not attempt to renew the discussion of Parliamentary 1eform, until 1797 He now had a definite plan, and on the 26th May, he moved for leave to bring in a Bill for carrying it into effect He proposed to increase the county members from nmety-two to one hundred and thuteen, by giving two members to each of the three ridings of the county of York, instead of two for the whole county, and by similar additions to other large countries; and to admit copyholders and leaseholders for terms of years, as well as freeholders, to the county franchise. As regards the boroughs, he proposed to substitute for the numerous rights of election, one uniform household franchise. And in order to diminish the expense of elections, he suggested that the poll should be taken, throughout the whole kingdom, at one time His scheme comprised, in fact, an outline of the great measure, which this eminent statesman was ultimately destined to mature, as the consummation of his labours during half a century His motion was seconded by Mr Erskine, in a speech which went far to contradict the assertion,-so often made,-that in the House of Commons this great forensic orator was wholly unequal to his reputation At once eloquent, impassioned, and argumentative, it displayed those rare qualities, which have never been equalled at the British bar, and not often in The motion was also supported, in an admusble speech, by Mr Fox But vain were moderate and well-considered plans,-vain were eloquence and The feelings, fears, and prejudices of the people were adverse to the cause reform being now confounded with revolution, and reformers with Ja-. cobins. Whatever was proposed, -- more was said to be intended, and Paine and the "Rights of Man" were perversely held up, as the true exponents of the reformer's creed The motion was rejected by a large majority 1

Again the question slept for many years The early Futbor disconnection of the present century was a period scarcely more ment of favourable for the discussion of parhamentary reform, reform than the first years of the French revolution produgious efforts of the country in carrying on the war, -victories and disasters,-loans, taxes, and subsidies.engrossed the attention of Parliament, and the thoughts of the people The restoration of peace was succeeded by other circumstances, almost equally unpropitious The extreme pressure of the war upon the industrial resources of the country, had occasioned suffering and discontent amongst the working classes The Government were busy in repressing sedition, and the governing classes, trained under a succession of Tory administrations, had learned to scout every popular principle Under such discouragements, many of the old supporters of reform, either deserted the cause, or shrank from its assertion, while demagogues, of dubious character, and dangerous principles, espoused it "Hampden Clubs," and other democratic associations,chiefly composed of working men. - were demanding universal suffrage and annual Parhaments, which found as little favour with the advocates of reform, as with its opponents, and every moderate scheme was received with scorn, by ultra-reformers 2

But notwithstanding these adverse conditions, the Si F Burquestion of reform was occasionally discussed in Par- dett's plan, hament In 1809, it was revived, after the lapse of

&lt;sup>1</sup> Paul Hast, vxxm C44 Ayes <sup>2</sup> Com Joun, lxv 360, &c 91, Noes 256

vor. r

thriteen years. Mr. Pitt and Mi. Fox,—who had first fought togethen in support of the same principles, and afterwards on opposite sides,—were both no more. Mr. Grey and Mi. Eiskine had been called to the House of Peers, and the cause was in other hands. Sur Finnes Burdett was now its advocate,—less able and influential than his predecessors, and an eccentric politician,—but a thorough-bred English gentleman. His scheme was such as to repel the support of the few remaining informers. He proposed that every county should be divided into electoral districts, that each district should return one member; and that the funchies should be vested in the taxed male population. So wild a project found no more than fifteen supporters.

Earl Grey, 1810 On the 13th June, 1810, Earl Grey, in moving an address on the state of the nation, renewed his public connexion with the cause of reform,—avowed his adherence to the sentiments he had always expressed,—and promised his future support to any temperate and judicious plan, for the correction of abuses in the representation. He was followed by Lord Eiskine, in the same honourable avowal <sup>2</sup>

In 1818, Sir F Buidett, now the Chairman of the datt, 1818-19.

Hampden Olub of London, proposed resolutions in the favour of universal male suffrage, equal electoral districts, vote by ballot, and annual Parliaments. His motion was seconded by Loid Cochiane, but found not another supporter in the House of Commons. At this time, their were numerous public meetings in favour of universal suffrage; and reform associations,—not only of men but of women,—were engaged in advancing the sume cause. And as many of these were

&lt;sup>1</sup> Hansard's Deb , 1st Sei , viv <sup>2</sup> Ibid , xvii 559, 590 1041. Ayes 15, Noes 74

advocating female suffrage, Sir F Burdeti, to avoid misconstruction, referred to male suffrage only 1

In 1819, Sir F Burdett again brought forward a motion on the subject He proposed that the House should, early in the next session, take into its consideration the state of the representation. In the debate, Lord John Russell, who had recently been admitted to Parhament, expressed his opinion in favour of disfranchisme such boroughs as were noto-110usly corrupt The motion was superseded by 1eading the orders of the day 2

At the commencement of the following session, Lord Lord J John Russell,—whose name has ever since been honour1820. ably associated with the cause of reform. - proposed his first motion on the subject. In the preceding session, he had brought under the notice of the House the scandalous proceedings at Grampound. He now took broader ground, and embraced the general evils of the electoral system 8 The time was not favourable to moderate counsels On one side were the intemperate advocates of universal suffrage on the other the stubborn opponents of all change in the representation,4 But such was the moderation of Lord John's scheme of reform, that it might have claimed the support of the wiser men of all parties He showed, in a most promising speech, that in former times decayed boroughs had been discharged from sending members, and populous places summoned by writ to return them . he described

1 See a learned and ingenious the cause of reform, it was making article in the Edin Rev, January, much progress in public opinion 1819, by Su J Mackintosh, on Sydney Smith, writing in 1819, Universal Suffiage, Art viii said, "I think all wise men should begin to turn their minds reform-wards. We shall do it better than

<sup>2</sup> Hansaid's Deb. 1st Ser. xl 1440

<sup>3</sup> Ibid, xli 302, 1091

M1 Hunt of M1 Cobbett Done 4 Notwithstanding the small en- it must, and will be "-Mem, in counsement given at this time to 191

the wonderful increase of the great manufacturing towns, which were unrepresented, and the corruption of the smaller boroughs, which sold their franchise. He concluded by moving resolutions.—1 That boroughs in which notorious bribery and corruption should be proved to prevail, should cease to return members,—the celectors not proved guilty, being allowed to vote for the county. 2 That the light thus taken from corrupt boroughs, should be given to great towns with a population of not less than 15,000, or to some of the largest counties. 3. That further means should be taken to detect corruption; and lastly, that the borough of the smooth should seek to send incomplets.

Grampound Distanchisement Bill.

of Grampound should cease to send members As the motion was met by the government in a concaliatory manner, and as Lord Castlereagh was ready to concur in the disfranchisement of Grampound, Lord John Russell consented to withdraw his resolutions, and gave notice of a bill for disfranchising Giampound 1 The progress of this bill was interrupted by the death of the king; but it was renewed. in the following session, and reached the House of Lords, where after evidence being taken at the bar, it dropped by reason of the prorogation. Again it was passed by the Commons, in 1821 That House had given the two vacant seats to the great town of Leeds. but the Lords still avoided the recognition of such a principle, by assigning two additional members to the county of York: in which form the bill was at length agreed to 2 In 1821, two motions were made relating to Parliamentary reform, the one by Mr Lambton, and the other by Lord John Russell. On the 17th April, the representation, he proposed to divide counties into districts containing twenty-five thousand inhabitants, each returning a member. —to extend the franchise for such districts, to all householders paying taxes,—to facilitate polling by means of numerous polling-booths, and by enabling overseers to receive votes, -and to charge the necessary expenses of every election upon the poor-rates To the county constituencies he proposed to add copyholders, and leaseholders for terms of years After a debate of two days, his motion was negatived by a majority of twelve 1 On the 9th of May, Lord John Told J Russell moved resolutions with a view to the discovery Russell's of bribery, the disfranchisement of corrupt boroughs, 1821 and the transfer of the right of returning members, to places which had increased in wealth and population His resolutions were superseded by the previous question, which was carried by a majority of thirty-one 2

Mr Lembton's proposal, 1821

&lt;sup>1</sup> Hansaid's Deb, 1st Sei, xhi <sup>2</sup> 1 & 2 Geo IV. c 47.

In 1822, Lord John Russell having, as he said, And in "served an apprenticeship in the cause of reform," 1822 again pressed the matter upon the notice of the House The cry for universal suffiage had now subsided.-tranquillity prevailed throughout the country,-and no circumstance could be unged as unfavourable to its fair consideration After showing the great increase of the wealth and intelligence of the country, he proposed the addition of sixty members to the counties. and forty to the great towns, and, -not to increase the total number of the House of Commons, -he suggested that one hundred of the smallest boroughs should each lose one of their two members. His motion.

Ayes 43, Noss 55 Hansaid's which is printed in the Appendix Debates, 2nd Series, v 359—453 to that volume of Debates, Mi Lambton had prepared a bill,
 2 Hans Deb, 2nd Ser, v 603 reduced to a modest resolution, "that the present state of representation required serious consideration," was rejected by a majority of one hundred and five 1

In 1823

In 1823, Lord John renewed his motion in the same terms. He was now supported by numerous petations, —and amongst the number by one from seventeen thousand freeholders of the county of York, but after a short debate, was defeated by a majority of one hundred and eleven.<sup>2</sup>

Lord J Russell's motion, 1826 Agam, m 1826, Loid John proposed the same resolution to the House, and pointed out forcibly, that the increasing wealth and intelligence of the people, were daily aggravating the inequality of the representation. Nomination boroughs continued to return a large proportion of the members of the House of Commons, while places of enormous population and commercial prosperity were without representatives. After an interesting debate, his resolution was negatived by a majority of one hundled and twenty-four.

Lord Blandford's views, 1829-30 a majority of one hundled and twenty-four so In 1829, a proposal for reform proceeded from an unexpected quarter, and was based upon punciples entirely novel. The measure of Catholic Emancipation had recently been carried, and many of its opponents, of the old Tory party,—disgusted with thor own leaders, by whom it had been forwarded,—were suddenly converted to the cause of parlamentary reform Representing their opinions, Lord Ellandford, on the 2nd June, submitted a motion on the subject. He appreheuded that the Roman Catholics would now cute the borough-market, and purchase seats for their representatives, in such numbers as to endanger our

Hansand's Deb , 2nd Ser , vn
 Hansand's Deb , 2nd Ser , vn
 11-139 Ayes 164, Noes 269
 Ayes 127, Noes 247.
 Ynd , vnii 1200 Ayes 109, Noes 260

Protestant constitution His resolutions condemning close and corrupt boroughs, found only forty supporters. and were rejected by a majority of seventy-four 1 At the commencement of the next session, Lord Blandford repeated these views, in moving an amendment to the address, representing the necessity of improving the representation Being seconded by Mr O'Connell, his anomalous position as a reformer was manifest 2

Soon afterwards he moved for leave to bring in a bill to restore the constitutional influence of the Commons in the Parliament of England, which contained an elaborate machinery of reform, including the restoration of wages to members 3 His motion served no other purpose, than that of reviving discussions upon the general question of reform

But in the meantime, questions of less general appli- Noithampcation had been discussed, which eventually produced ton and Legicester the most important results. The disclosures which cases, followed the general election of 1826, and the conduct of the government, gave a considerable impulse to the cause of reform The corporations of Northampton and Leicester were alleged to have applied large sums from the corporate funds, for the support of ministerial Mar 15th candidates In the Northampton case, Sir Robert Peel went so far as to maintain the right of a corporation to apply its funds to election purposes, but the House could not be brought to concur in such a principle, and a committee of inquiry was appointed 4 In the Leicester case, all inquiry was successfully resisted 5 Next came two cases of gross and notorious bribery, Penryn and -Penryn and East Retford They were not worse East Retford cases, than those of Shoreham and Grampound, and might 1828-27

Hansaid s Deb , 2nd Ser , xxi 1672 Ayes 40, Noes 114 July 171. 8 Hans Deb, 2nd Ser, vxu 678 4 Ibid . 5 Ibid

have been as easily disposed of, but,—treated without judgment by the ministers,—they precipitated a contest, which ended in the triumph of reform

Pemyn had long been notorious for its corruption, which had been already twice exposed?, yet the ministers resolved to deal tenderly with it. Instead of disfinanchising so corrupt a borough, they followed the precedent of Shoreham, and proposed to embrace the adjacent hundreds, in the privilege of returning members. But true to the principles he had already carried out in the case of Grampound, Lord John Russell succeeded in introducing an amendment in the bill, by which the borough was to be entitly disflanchised?

In the case of East Retford, a bill was brought in to disfranchise that bough, and to enable the town of Birmingham to return two representatives. And it was intended by the reformers, to transfer the franchise from Penryn to Manchester. The session closed without the accomplishment of either of these objects. The Penryn Disfranchisement bill, having passed the Commons, had dropped in the Lords, and the East Retford bill had not yet passed the Commons.

Penryn and East Retford bills, 1828

In the next session, two bills were introduced, one by Lord John Russell, for transferring the franchise from Penryn to Manchester; and another by Mr Tennyson, for disfianchising East Retford, and giving representatives to Burmingham <sup>8</sup> The government proposed a compromise If both boroughs were disfranchised, they offered, in one case to give two members to a populous town, and in the other to the adjoining hundreds <sup>4</sup> When the Penryn bill had already reached the House

682, 1055

&lt;sup>1</sup> In 1807 and 1819 <sup>2</sup> Hansard's Deb , 2nd Ser , xvu

Hansard's Deb , 2nd Sei , xviii

<sup>4</sup> Ibid, 1144, 1282.

of Loids,-where its reception was extremely doubtful, - the East Retford bill came on for discussion in the Commons The government now opposed the transference of the franchise to Birmingham Mr Huskisson, however, voted for it, and his proffered resignation being accepted by the Duke of Wellington', led to the withdrawal of Lord Palmeiston, Lord Dudley, Mi Lamb, and Mr Grant,-the most liberal members of the government,-the firends and colleagues of the late Mr Canning The cabinet was now entirely Tory; and less disposed than ever, to make concessions to the icformers The Penryn bill was soon afterwards thrown out by the Lords on the second reading, and the East Retford bill, having been amended so as to retain the fianchise in the hundreds,-was abandoned in the Commons 2

It was the opinion of many attentive observers of these Proposal to times, that the concession of demands so reasonable would enfranchise Leeds, Birhave arrested, or postponed for many years, the progress mungham, and Munof reform They were resisted, and further agitation chester, was encouraged In 1830, Lord John Russell, -no longer hoping to deal with Penryn and East Retford,proposed at once to enfranchise Leeds, Burningham, and Manchester, and to provide that the three next places proved guilty of corruption, should be altogether disfranchised 8 His motion was opposed, mainly on the ground that if the franchise were given to these towns, the claims of other large towns could not afterwards be resisted Where, then, were such concessions to stop? It is remarkable that on this occasion, Mr Huskisson said of Lord Sandon, who had moved an amendment, that he "was young, and would yet live to see the day when the representative franchise must be granted to the great manufacturing districts He thought such a time fast approaching, and that one day or other, His Majesty's ministers would come down to that House, to propose such a measure, as necessary for the salvation of the country "Within a year, this prediction had been verified, though the unfortunate stateman did not live to see its fulfilment. The motion was negatived by a majority of forty-eight!, and thus another moderate proposal,—free from the objections which had been urged against disfranchisement, and not affecting any existing rights,—was sacrificed to a major was no obstinate tread of unovation.

Hans Deb, 2nd Sei, xix 915 Ibid, 1530. s Hansard's Deb , 2nd Sei , xxii

Other pro-

✓ In this same session, other proposals were made of a widely different character. Mr O'Connell moved resolutions in favour of universal suffrage, triennial Parliaments, and vote by ballot Lord John Russell moved to substitute other resolutions, providing for the enfranchisement of large towns, and giving additional members to populous counties, while any increase of the numbers of the House of Commons was avoided, by disfranchising some of the smaller boroughs, and restraining others from sending more than one member 2 Sir Robert Peel, in the course of the debate, said "They had to consider whether there was not, on the whole, a general representation of the people in that House, and whether the popular voice was not sufficiently heard For himself he thought that it was" This opinion was but the prelude to a more memorable declaration, by the Duke of Wellington Both the motion and the amendment failed, but discussions so frequent served to awaken public sympathy in the cause, which great events were soon to alouse into enthusiasm

Ayes 140, Noes 188.

Hansard's Deb , 2nd Ser , xxiv.

At the end of this session, Parliament was dissolved, Dissolution in consequence of the death of George IV. The government was weak,-parties had been completely disorganised by the passing of the Roman Catholic Relief Act. - much discontent prevailed in the country, and the question of parliamentary reform,-which had been so often discussed in the late session,-became a popular topic at the elections Meanwhile a startling event abroad, added to the usual excitement of a general election Scarcely had the writs been issued, when Charles X of France,-having attempted a coup d'état, -lost his crown, and was an exile on his way to England 1 As he had fallen, in violating the liberty of the press, and subverting the representative constitution of France, this sudden revolution gained the sympathy of the English people, and gave an impulse to liberal opinions The excitement was further increased by the revolution in Belgium, which immediately followed The new Parliament, elected under such circumstances, met in October. Being without the restraint of a strong government, acknowledged leaders, and accustomed party connexions, it was open to fiesh political impressions, and the first night of the session determined their direction

A few words from the Duke of Wellington raised a Duke of storm, which swept away his government, and destroyed Welling. his party In the debate on the address, Earl Grey daration adverted to reform, and expressed a hope that it would not be deferred, like Catholic Emancipation, until government would be "compelled to yield to expediency,

&lt;sup>1</sup> Parlament was dissolved July menced in France, on the 27th 24th. The "three days" com-

what they refused to concede upon principle" This elicited from the Duke, an ill-timed profession of faith in our representation "He was fully convinced that the country possessed, at the present moment, a legislature which answered all the good purposes of legislation.-and this to a greater degree than any legislature ever had answered, in any country whatever. He would go further, and say that the legislature and system of representation possessed the full and entire confidence of the country,-deservedly possessed that confidence,-and the discussions in the legislature, had a very great influence over the opinions of the country He would go still further, and sav, that if at the present moment he had unposed upon him the duty of forming a legislature for any country, - and paiticularly for a country like this, in possession of great property of various descriptions,-he did not mean to assert that he could form such a legislature as they possessed now, for the nature of man was incapable of reaching such excellence at once, but his great endeayour would be to form some description of legislature, which would produce the same results these cucumstances he was not prepared to bring forward any measure of the description alluded to by the noble lord He was not only not prepared to bring forward any measure of this nature; but he would at once declare that, as far as he was concerned, as long as he held any station in the government of the country, he should always feel it his duty to resist such measures, when proposed by others "1

At another time such sentiments as these might have passed unheeded, like other general panegyrics upon the British constitution, with which the public taste had long been familiar Yet, so general a defence of our representative system had never, perhaps, been hazarded by any statesman Ministers had usually been cautious in advancing the theoretical ments of the system, - even when its abuses had been less frequently exposed, and public opinion less awakened They had spoken of the dangers of innovation,-they had asserted that the system, if imperfect in theory, had vet " worked well."- they had said that the people were satisfied, and desired no change,—they had appealed to revolutions abroad, and disaffection at home, as reasons for not entertaining any proposal for change, but it was reserved for the Duke of Wellington,-at a time of excitement like the present,-to insult the understanding of the people, by declaring that the system was perfect in itself, and deservedly possessed their confidence

&lt;sup>1</sup> Hansaid's Deb, 3rd Ser, 1. did not deny that he had used the 52 The Duke, on a subsequent expressions attributed to him.—occasion, explained this speech but Ibid, via 1180.

On the same night, Mr. Brougham gave notice of a Fall of the motion on the subject of parliamentary reform Within governa fortnight, the Duke's administration resigned, after an adverse division in the Commons, on the appointment of a committee to examine the accounts of the Civil List 1 Though this defeat was the immediate cause of their resignation, the expected motion of Mr Brougham was not without its influence, in determining them to withdraw from further embarrassments

Earl Grey was the new Minister, and Mr Brougham Lord his Lord Chancellor The first announcement of the Grey's munistry premier was that the government would "take into <sup>1</sup> Sydney Smith, writing Nov entirely by the Duke's declaration, 1830, says "Novai was any administration so completely and so inace of the state of public teeling suddenly destroyed, and, I believe, and opmion "—Mem, in, 313"

immediate consideration the state of the representation, with a view to the correction of those defects which have been occasioned in it, by the operation of time, and with a view to the re-establishment of that confidence upon the part of the people, which he was afraid Paihament did not at present enjoy, to the full extent that is essential for the welfare and safety of the country, and the preservation of the government. 11

'Agitation in favour

try, and the preservation of the government "1 The government were now pledged to a measure of parliamentary reform, and during the Christmas recess. were occupied in preparing it Meanwhile, the cause was eagerly supported by the people Public meetings were held, political umons established 2, and numerous petations signed, in favour of reform. So great were the difficulties with which the government had to contend, that they needed all the encouragement that the people could give They had to encounter the reluctance of the king s, - the interests of the proprietors of boloughs, which Mr Pitt, unable to overcome, had sought to purchase, - the opposition of two-thirds of the House of Lords, and perhaps of a majority of the House of Commons, - and above all, the strong Tory spirit of the country Tory principles had been strengthened by a rule of sixty years Not confined to the governing classes, but pervading society, they were now confirmed by the fears of impending danger. On the other hand, the too ardent reformers, while they alarmed the opponents of reform, embarrassed the government, and injured the cause, by their ex-. travagance

First Reform Bill, Lord Grey announced that the government had succeeded in framing "a measure which would be effective, without exceeding the bounds of a just and well-advised moderation," and which "had received the unanimous consent of the whole government"

&lt;sup>1</sup> Hausard's Deb, 3rd, Ser, 1 <sup>2</sup> See Chap VIII. Pross and Liberty of Opinion - <sup>2</sup> Signq, p 115.

On the 1st March, this measure was brought forward in the House of Commons by Lord John Russell, to whom.-though not in the cabinet.-this honourable duty had been justly confided In the House of Commons he had already made the question his own. and now he was the exponent of the policy of the government. The measure was briefly this - to disfranchise sixty of the smallest boroughs, to withdraw one member from forty-seven other boroughs, to add eight members for the metiopolis, thuty-four for large towns, and fifty-five for counties, in England, and to give five additional members to Scotland, three to Ireland, and one to Wales By this new distribution of the franchise, the House of Commons would be reduced in number from six hundred and fifty-eight, to five hundred and nanety-six, or by sixty-two members 1

For the old nights of election in boroughs, a 10th household franchise was substituted, and the corporations were deprived of their exclusive privileges. It was computed that half a million of persons would be enfianchised. Improved an angements were also proposed, for the registration of votes, and the mode of polling at elections

This bold measure alarmed the opponents of reform, and failed to satisfy the racheal reformers, but on the whole, it was well received by the reform party, and by the country One of the most stirring periods in our history was approaching but its events must be rapidly passed over. After a debate of seven mights, the bill was brought in without a division. Its opponents were collecting their forces, while the excitement of the people in favour of the measure, was continually increasing On the 22nd March, the second reading of the bill was carried by a majority of one only, in a House of six hundred and eight, - probably the greatest number which, up to that time, had ever been assembled at a division On the 19th of April, on going into committee, ministers found themselves in a minority of eight, on a resolution proposed by General Gascovne, that the number of members returned for England, ought not to be diminished 1 On the 21st, ministers announced that it was not their intention to proceed with the bill. On that same night, they were again defeated on a question of adjournment, by a majority of twenty-two 2

Hansaid's Deb, 3id Sei, ii 1061

Descinion m 1831

This last vote was decisive. The very next day. Pai hament was prorogued by the king in person, "with a view to its immediate dissolution "8 It was one of the most critical days in the history of our country. At a time of grave political agitation, the people were directly appealed to by the king's government, to support a measure by which their feelings and passions had been aroused, - and which was known to be obnoxious to both Houses of Parliament, and to the governing classes

Second Reform Bill. 1831

The people were now to decide the question, - and they decided it A triumphant body of reformers was

1 Hansard's Deb, Sid Ser, m

&lt;sup>2</sup> Ibul, 1806 It has often been represented,—and was so stated by Lord Brougham on the following day, -- that this voto amounted to "stopping the supplies." It cannot however, bear such a construction, the question before the House being a motion concerning the Liverpool election Late down in the hat of orders of the day, a report from the Committee of Supply was to be received, which dropped by reason of the adjournment S Hansaid's Deb, Sid Ser, m

<sup>1810</sup> See supra, p 118

returned, pledged to carry the reform bill, and on the 6th July, the second reading of the renewed measure was agreed to, by a majority of one hundred and thirtysix 1 The most tedious and irritating discussions ensued in committee. - night after night, and the bill was not disposed of until the 21st September, when it was passed by a majority of one hundred and nine 2

That the peers were still adverse to the bill was cer- Rejected tain but whether, at such a crisis, they would venture lords to oppose the national will, was doubtful 8 On the 7th October, after a debate of five nights,—one of the most memorable by which that House has ever been distinoushed, and itself a great event in history. - the bill was rejected on the second reading, by a majority of

The battle was to be fought again Ministers were Third Retoo far pledged to the people to think of resigning, and form Bill, on the motion of Lord Ebrington, they were immediately supported by a vote of confidence from the House of Commons

On the 20th October, Parliament was prorogued; and after a short interval of excitement, turbulence and danger, met again on the 6th December reform bill was immediately brought in,-changed in many respects, - and much improved by reason of the recent census, and other statistical investigations Amongst other changes, the total number of members

340 This debate I heard myself, being present in the House of Lords until the daylight division on the 7th October It was the first de-bate m the Lords, which I had yet had the privilege of attending Hansard's Deb , Sid Ser., viii

forty-one 4

VOL L

<sup>1</sup> Hansard's Deb , 3rd Sei , iv 906 Ayes, 367, Noes, 231 <sup>2</sup> Ibid, vn 464 The division was taken on the question, "That this Bill do pass" 5 The position of the Peers at this time has been already noticed,

supra, p 257, et seq 4 Hansaid's Deb, 3id Ser, vin was no longer proposed to be reduced This bill was read a second time on Sunday morning, the 18th of December, by a majority of one hundred and sixty-two 1 On the 23rd Maich, it was passed by the House of Commons, and once more was before the House of Lords.

Read second time by the Lords

Here the peril of again rejecting it could not be concealed, - the courage of some was shaken, - the patriotism of others aroused; and after a debate of four nights, the second reading was affirmed by the narrow majority of nine But danger still awaited it The peers who would no longer venture to reject such a bill, were preparing to change its essential character by amendments. Meanwhile the agitation of the people was becoming dangerous Compulsion and physical force were spoken of , and political unions, and monster meetings assumed an attitude of intimidation was approaching, - fatal, perhaps, to the peace of the country violence, if not revolution, seemed impending The disfranchisement of boroughs formed the basis of the measure, and the first vote of the peers, in committee on the bill, postponed the consideration of the disfranchising clauses, by a majority of thirty-five 2 Notwithstanding the assurances of opposition peers, that they would concede a large measure of reform,-it was now > resign.* This alternative was submitted to the king \( \triangle \) He refused to create peers the ministers resigned, and

Disfianchising clauses postponed.

>
> \[ ^1\) Hansaid's Deb., 3rd Ser, ix.
> \[ ^2\) Hansaid's Deb., 3rd Ser, xii.
> \[ ^6\) To secured, b. 259.

evident that amendments would be made, to which ministers were bound in honour to the people and the either the Lords must be coerced, or the ministers must

The time had come, when Commons, not to assent

their resignation was accepted. Again the Commons came to the rescue of the bill and the reform ministry On the motion of Lord Ebrington, an address was immediately voted by them, renewing their expressions of unaltered confidence in the late ministers, and imploing his Majesty "to call to his councils such persons only, as will carry into effect, unimpaired in all its essential provisions, that bill for reforming the representation of the people, which has recently passed this House"

The king, meanwhile, insisted upon one condition, - Reform that any new ministry, -however constituted, -should Act passed. pledge themselves to an extensive measure of reform 1 But, even if the Commons and the people had been willing to give up their own measure, and accept another at the hands of their opponents. - no such ministry could be formed The public excitement was greater than ever; and the government and the people were in imminent danger of a bloody collision, when Earl Grev was recalled to the councils of his sovereign. The bill was now secure The peers averted the * threatened addition to their numbers, by abstaining from further opposition, and the bill, - the Great Charter of 1832, — at length received the Royal Assent 2

It is now time to advert to the provisions of this The Refamous statute, and to inquire how far it corrected the form Act England, faults of a system, which had been complained of for 1832. more than half a century. The main evil had been the number of nomination, or rotten boroughs enjoying the franchise. Fifty-six of these, - having less than two thousand inhabitants, and returning one hundred and eleven members, - were swept away Thirty boroughs, having less than four thousand inhabitants, lost each a member Weymouth and Melcombe Regis lost two. This disfranchisement extended to one hundred and forty-three members. The next evil had been, that large populations were unrepresented, and this was now redressed Twenty-two large towns, including metropolitan districts, received the privilege of returning two members, and twenty more, of returning one The large county populations were also regarded in the distribution of seats, - the number of county members being increased from ninety-four to one hundred and fifty-nine The larger counties were divided, and the number of members adjusted with reference to the importance of the constituencies

Another evil was the restricted and unequal franchise This too was corrected All nairow nights of election were set aside in boroughs, and a 101 household franchise was established. The freemen of corporate towns were the only class of electors whose lights were reserved, but residence within the borough was attached as a condition to their night of voting Those freemen, however, who had been created since March 1831, were excepted from the electoral puvilege Crowds had received their freedom, in order to vote against the reform candidates at the general election. they had served their purpose, and were now disfranchised Buth or servitude were henceforth to be the sole claims to the freedom of any city, which should confer a vote

The county constituency was enlarged by the addition of copyholders and leaseholders, for terms of years, and of tenants-at-will paying a rent of 50l a year. The latter class had been added in the Commons, on the motion of the Marquess of Chandos, in opposition to the government The object of this addition was to strengthen the interests of the landlords, which it undoubtedly effected, but as it extended the franchise to a considerable class of persons, it was at least consistent with the liberal design of the reform act

Another evil of the representative system had been the excessive expenses at elections. This too was sought to be mitigated by the registration of electors, the division of counties and boloughs into convenient polling districts, and the reduction of the days of polling

It was a measure, at once bold, comprehensive, moderate, and constitutional Popular, but not democratic - it extended liberty, without hazarding revolution Two years before, Parhament had refused to enfianchise a single unrepresented town, and now this wide redistribution of the franchise had been accomplished! That it was theoretically complete, and left nothing for future statesmen to effect, - its authors neveraffirmed, but it was a masterly settlement of a perilous question Its defects will be noticed hereafter, in recounting the efforts which have since been made to correct them, but whatever they were, - no law since the Bill of Rights, is to be compared with it in importance. Worthy of the struggles it occasioned, - it conferred immortal honour on the statesmen who had the wisdom to conceive it - and the courage to command its success

The defects of the Scotch representation, being even The Remore flagrant and indefensible than those of England, form Act, Scotland, were not likely to be omitted from Lord Grev's general scheme of reform On the 9th March, 1831, a bill was brought in to amend the representation of Scotland, but the discussions on the English bill, and the sudden dissolution of Parliament, interrupted its further progress The same lot awaited it, in the short session of 1831, but in 1832, its success was assured in the general triumph of the cause 1 The entire representation was remodelled. Forty-five members had been assigned to Scotland at the Union this number was now increased to fifty-three, of whom thirty were allotted to counties, and twenty-three to cities and burghs. The county franchise was extended to all owners of property of 10% a year, and to certain classes of leaseholders; and the burgh franchise to all 101 householders The representation of Ireland had many of the defects Act, Ire-land, 1832 of the English system Several 10tten and nomination boroughs, however, had already been disfranchised on the union with England; and disfranchisement, therefore, did not form any part of the Irish Reform Act. But the right of election was taken away from the corporations, and vested in 10l householders, and large additions were made to the county constituency. The number of members in Ireland, which the Act of Union had settled at one hundred, was now increased to one hundred and five 2

TheReform

Burther ortension of the Imsh franchise. 1850

This measure was the least successful of the three great reform acts of 1832. Complaints were immediately made of the restricted franchise which it had created, and the number of electors registered, proved much less than had been anticipated. After repeated discussions, a measure was passed in 1850, by which

- the borough franchise was extended to householders
  - <sup>1</sup> 2 & 3 Will. IV c, 65 sard's Deb , 3rd Ser , ni 862 , Ibid , <sup>2</sup> 2 & 3 Will. IV. c, 88. Han- ix 595 , Ibid , xm 119.

rated at 81, and further additions were made to the county franchise 1

The representation of the country had now been re- Political constructed on a wider basis. Large classes had been the Reform admitted to the franchise, and the House of Commons Acts represented more freely the interests and political sentiments of the people The reformed Parliament, accordingly, has been more liberal and progressive in its policy than the Parhaments of old, more vigorous and active, more susceptible to the influence of public opinion; and more secure in the confidence of the people But in its constitution, grave defects still remained to be considered Prominent among the evils of the electoral system Binbery since the which have been noticed, was that of bilbery at elec- since the tions For the correction of this evil, the reform acts Act made no duect provision Having increased the number of electors, the legislature trusted to their independence and public spirit in the exercise of the franchise, and to the existing laws against bribery. But bribery is the scandal of free institutions in a rich country, and it was too soon evident, that as more votes had been created, more votes were to be sold It was not in nomination boroughs, or in boroughs sold m gross, that birbery had flourished. but it had been the vice of places where a small body of electors, exercising the same privilege as proprietors,-sold the seats which by their individual votes they had the power of conferring.

The reform act had suppressed the very boroughs which had been free from bribery it had preserved boloughs, and classes of voters, familiarised with corrupt practices, and had created new boroughs, exposed to the same temptations Its tendency, therefore,unless corrected by moral influences, - was to increase rather than diminish colluption, in the smaller boroughs And this scandal, - which had first arisen out of the growing wealth of the country, --- was now encouraged by accumulations of property, more vast than in any previous period in our history If the niches of the nabobs had once proved a source of electoral corruption,-what temptations have since been offered to voters, by the grant fortunes of our own age? Cotton, coal, and iron,-the steam-engine, and the railway, -have called into existence thousands of men, more wealthy than the merchant princes of the olden time The riches of Australia alone, may now vie with the ancient wealth of the Indies Men enriched from these sources have generally been active and public spirited,-engaged in enterprises which parhamentary influence could promote, ambitious of distinction, and entitled to appeal to the interests and sympathies of electors Such candidates as these, if they have failed to command votes by their public claims, have had the means of buying them; and their notorious wealth has excited the cupidity of electors. This great addition to the opulent classes of society, has multiplied the means of bribery, and the extension of the fianchise, has enlarged the field over which it has been spread. Nor has the operation of these causes been sufficiently counteracted by such an enlargement of borough constituencies, as would have placed them beyond the reach of undue solicitation,

So far the moral and social evils of bribery may have been encouraged, but its political results have been less material. Formerly a large proportion of the members of the House of Commons owed their seats to corruption, in one form or another now no more than an insignificant fraction of the entire body are so tainted Once the counterpoise of free representation was wanting · now it prevails over the baser elements of the constitution Nor does the political conduct of members chosen by the aid of bribery, appear to be gravely affected by the original vice of their election Eighty years ago, their votes would have been secured by the king, or his ministers now they belong indiscriminately to all parties Too rich to seek office and emolument, - even were such prizes attainable, - and rarely aspiring to honours, - they are not found corruptly supporting the government of the day, but range themselves on either side, according to their political views, and fairly enter upon the duties of public life

The exposure of corrupt practices since 1832, has been Sudbury discreditably frequent, but the worst examples have Albans disbeen presented by boroughs of evil reputation, which franchised the reform act had spared Sudbury had long been foremost in open and unblushing corruption1, which being continued after the reform act, was conclusively punished by the disfranchisement of the borough 2 St. Albans, not less corrupt, was a few years later, wholly disfianchised 8 Corrupt practices were exposed at Waiwick<sup>4</sup>, at Stafford<sup>5</sup>, and at Ipswich <sup>6</sup> In corporate towns, freemen had been the class of voters most tainted by bribery, and their electoral rights having been respected by the reform act, they continued to abuse them. At Yarmouth their demoralisation was so general, that they were disfranchised, as a body, by act of parhament 7 But bribery was by no means

See sup a, p 280
 7 & 8 Vict c 53 3 15 & 16 Vict c 9

Ibid, No 537
 Ibid, 1835, No 286,
 11 & 12 Viet c, 24

<sup>4</sup> Rep of Committee, 1833, No. 295.

confined to the freemen The 10*l* householders created by the reform act, were too often found unworthy of their new franchise Misled by bad examples, — and generally encouraged by the smallness of the electoral body,—they yielded to the corrupt influences by which their political virtue has been assailed. In numerous cases these constituencies,—when their offence was not sufficiently grave to justify a permanent disfinichisement,—were punished in a less degree, by the suspension of the writis.

Measures for the prevention of bribery. Meanwhile, Parliament was devising means for the more general exposure and correction of such disgraceful practices. It was not enough that writs had been suspended, and the worst constituencies disfranchised it was necessary for the credit of the House of Commons, and of the new electoral system, that gross abuses of the franchise should be more effectually restrained.

Bribery Act. 1841 The first measure introduced with this object, was that of Lord John Russell in 1841 Many members who had won their seats by hibery, escaped detection, under cover of the rules of evidence, then followed by election committees: These committees had,—not unnaturally,—required a preliminary proof that persons alleged to have committed bribery, were agents of the sitting member or candidate. Until such agency had been established, they declined to investigate general charges of bribery, which unless committed by authorised agents would not affect the election. When this evidence was wanting,—as it often was,—all the charges of bribery at once fell to the ground; the member retained his seat, and the corrupt electors escaped exposure. To obviate this cause of failure, the act of

<sup>1</sup> Warwick, Carrickfergus, Hertford, Stafford, Inswich, &c.

1841',-inverting the order of proceeding,-required committees to receive evidence generally upon the charges of bribery, without prior investigation of agency, and thus proofs or implications of agency have since been elicited from the general evidence. And even where agency has not been established, every act of bribery, by whomsoever committed, has been disclosed by witnesses, and reported to the House

While this measure has facilitated the exposure of bribery, it has often pressed with undue severity upon the sitting member. Inferences rather than proofs of agency having been accepted, members have forferted then seats for the acts of unauthorised agents, without any evidence of their own knowledge or consent In the administration of this law, committees,so far from desiring to screen delinquents,-have erred rather on the side of severity. The investigation of corrupt practices has also been, incidentally, facilitated by the amendment of the law of evidence, which permits the personal examination of sitting members and candidates 2

The act of 1841 was followed by another, in the Bribery next year<sup>8</sup>, which provides for the prosecution of in- Acts, 1842 vestigations into bribery, after an election committee has closed its inquiries, or where charges of bribery have been withdrawn But this measure not having proved effectual; another act was passed in 18524, providing for the most searching inquiries into corrupt practices, by commissioners appointed by the Crown, on the address of the two Houses of Parliament. In the exposure of bribery,-and the punishment of its own members when concerned in it,-Parliament has shown no want of earnestness, but in the repression of the offence itself, and the punishment of conjust electors. its measures have been less felicitous. The disclosures of commissions have been barren of results. At Conterbury one hundred and fifty-five electors had been bubed at one election, and seventy-nine at another at Maldon, seventy-six electors had received bribes at Barnstaple, two hundred and fifty-five, at Cambridge, one hundred and eleven, and at Kingstonupon-Hull no less than eight hundred and forty-seven At the latter place, 26,606L had been spent in three elections In 1854, bills were brought in for the prevention of bribery in those places, and the disfranchisement of the electors who had been proved to be corrupt 1 But under the act which authorised these inquiries, voters giving evidence were entitled to claim an indemnity, and it was now successfully contended that they were protected from disfranchisement, as one of the penalties of their offence. These bills were accordingly withdrawn 2 Again in 1858, a commission having reported that one hundred and eighty-thice freemen of Galway had received bribes, a bill was introduced for the disfranchisement of the freemen of that borough; but for the same reasons, it also miscarried 8

<sup>4 &</sup>amp; 5 Vict e 57 5 & 6 Vact c 102 * Lord Denman's Act, 14 & 15 4 16 & 16 Vict c 57.

In 1860 there were strange disclosures affecting the ancient city of Gloucester. This place had been long familiar with corruption In 1816 a single candidate had spent 27,500? at an election, in 1818 another candidate had spent 16,000?, and now it appeared that at the last election in 1859, two hundred and fifty electors had been bribed, and eighty-one persons had been guilty of corrupting them.1

&lt;sup>1</sup> Hansard's Deb., 3rd Ser., exxxx. <sup>3</sup> Hansard's Deb., 3rd Ser., exlix 1018 378, &c. <sup>3</sup> Lansard's Deb., 3rd Ser., exxxx. 1064.

Up to this time, the places which had been distin- Wakefield guished by such malpractices, had returned members 1859 to Parhament pilor to 1832, but in 1860 the perplexing discovery was made, that bribery had also extensively prevailed in the populous and thriving borough of Wakefield,-the creation of the reform act Eightvsix electors had been bribed, and such was the zeal of the canvassers, that no less than ninety-eight persons had been concerned in bribing them 2

The writs for Gloucester and Wakefield were suspended, as a modified punishment of these corrupt places, but the House of Commons was as much at fault as ever, in providing any permanent correction of the evils which had been discovered

In 1854, a more general and comprehensive measure corrupt was devised, for the prevention of corrupt practices at Act, 1854 elections 8 It restrained candidates from paying any election expenses, except through their authorised agents, and the election auditor; and provided for the publication of accounts of all such expenses It was hoped that these securities would encourage, and perhaps enforce, a more legal expenditure, but they have since received little credit for advancing the cause of purity

This temporary act has since been continued from Bubers time to time, and in 1858 was amended The legality Act of Traof travelling expenses to voters had long been a matter of veiling expenses doubt, - having received discordant constructions from different committees The payment of such expenses

Report of Commissioners, 1860
 17 & 18 Vict. c. 102
 Ibid

might be a covert form of bribery, or it might be a reasonable accommodation to voters, in the proper exercise of their franchise This doubt had not been settled by the act of 1854, but it had been adjudged in a court of law<sup>1</sup>, that the payment of travelling expenses was not bribery, if paid bond fide to indemnify a voter for the expenses he had incurred in travelling to the poll,—and not as a corrupt inducement to vote The act of 1858, following the principle of this judgment.but adding a further security for its observance, - permitted the candidate, or his agent appointed in writing, to provide conveyance for voters to the poll, but prohibited the payment of any money to voters them-selves, for that purpose 2 But it was objected at the time, and the same objection has since been repeated. -that the legalising of travelling expenses, even in this guarded manner, tends to increase the expenses of elections, and this debatable question will probably

Policy of legislation concerning bribery receive further consideration from the legislature. It is the policy of these recent acts to define clearly the expenses which a candidate may lawfully incur, and to ensure publicity to his accounts. So far their provisions are a security to the candidate who is resolved to resist the payment of illegal expenses, and an embarrassment, at least, to those who are prepared to violate the law. That they have not been effectual in the restraint of bribery, the recent disclosures of election committees, and commissions sufficiently attest. Though large constituences have, in some instances, proved themselves accessible to corruption, bribery has prevailed most extensively in the smaller boroughs. Hence some remedy may be sought in the enlargement of electoral bodies, and the extension of the area of voting. To repress so grave an evil, more effectual measures will doubtless be devised; but they may still be expected to fail, until bribery shall be unmistakably condemned by public opinion. The law had treated duelling as murder, yet the penalty of death was unable to repress it, but when society discountenanced that time-honoured custom, it was suddenly abandoned Voters may always be found to receive bribes, if offered, but candidates belong to a class whom the influence of society may restrain from committing an offence, condemned alike by the law, and by public opinion.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Cooper v Slade, 6 E. and B, <sup>2</sup> 21 & 22 Vict c. 87 447, Rogers on Elections, 334.

Other questions affecting the constitution of Parliament, and the exercise of the elective franchise, have been discussed at various times, as well before as since the reform act, and here demand a passing notice

To shorten the duration of Parhaments, has been one purstion of of the changes most frequently urged Prior to 1694, ments a Parliament once elected, unless dissolved by the The Sep-Crown, continued in being until the demise of the tennalAct reigning king One of the Parliaments of Charles II had sat for eighteen years. By the Triennial Act 1 every Parliament, unless sooner dissolved came to a natural end in three years On the accession of George I this period was extended to seven years, by the well known Septennial Act 2 This act, though supported on the ground of general expediency, was passed at a time of political danger; - when the country had scarcely recovered from the rebellion of 1715, and the Jacobite adherents of the Pretender were still an object of apprehension to the government

In the leign of George II. attempts were made to repeal the septenmal act1, and carly in the next reign. Alderman Sawbiidge submitted motions, year after year until his death, for shortening the duration of Parliaments In 1771 Lord Chatham "with the most deliberate and solemn conviction declared himself a convert to thennial Parliaments "2 The question afterwards became associated with plans of Parliamentary reform It formed part of the scheme proposed by the "Friends of the People" in 1792 At that period, and again in 1797, it was advocated by Mr Grev, in connection with an improved representation, as one of the means of increasing the responsibility of Parliament to the people 3 The advocates of a measure for shortening the duration of Parhaments, were not then agreed as to the proper limit to be substituted . whether one. three, or five years 4 But annual Parliaments have generally been embraced in schemes of radical reform In times more recent, the repeal of the Septennial Act.—as a distinct question of public policy,—has often been fairly and temperately discussed in Parliament. In 1817 Mr Brougham gave notice of a motion on the subject, but did not bring it forward. In 1818 Sir Robert Heron moved for leave to bring in a bill, and was supported by Sir Samuel Romilly and Mr Brougham; but the proposal met with little favour or attention 5 The subject was not revived until after the passing of the reform act. It was then argued with much ability by Mr. Tennyson, in 1833, 1834. and 1837; and on each oceasion met with the support of considerable minorities.6 On the last occasion, the

1 6 Will and Marv. c 2

2 1 Geo I c 38.

-/ In 1734 and 1741

&lt;sup>2</sup> Parl Hist, xyn 223 <sup>3</sup> Ibid, xxxin 650

* Rockingham Mem , 11. 395

<sup>5</sup> Hansaid's Deb , 1st Ser , xxxyiii 802 6 Hansaid's Deb , 3nd Ser , xix

<sup>6</sup> Hansard's Deb, 31d Ser., xix. 1107, Ibid., xxiii. 1036, Ibid., xxxviii. 680.

motion was defeated by a majority of nine only 1 It did not, however, receive the support of any of the leading statesmen, who had recently carried parhamentary reform That measure had greatly increased the responsibility of the House of Commons to the people, and its authors were satisfied that no further change was then required in the constitution of Parliament In 1843, Mr Sharman Crawfurd revived the question; but met with scant encouragement 2 Lastly, m 1849, Mr Tennyson D'Eyncourt obtained leave to bung m a bill, by a majority of five 8 But notwithstanding this unexpected success, the question, if discussed elsewhere as a matter of theoretical speculation. has since ceased to occupy the attention of Parliament

The repeal of the septennial act has been repeatedly Arguments advocated on the ground that the Parhament of George I. Septemnal had abused its trust, in prolonging its own existence, Act and that, even admitting the overruling necessity of the occasion, -the measure should at least have been temporary To this it has been answered, that if any wrong was done, it was committed against the people of that day, to whom no reparation can now be made But to contend that there was any breach of trust, is to limit the authority of Parliament, within bounds not recognised by the constitution Parliament has not a limited authority.—expressly delegated to it; but has absolute power to make or repeal any law, and every one of its acts is again open to revision. Without a prior dissolution of Parliament, the Unions of Scotland and Ireland were effected, at an interval of nearly a century . - measures involving the extinction of the

VOL I BB

Purhaments of those countries, and a fundamental change in that of England, much greater than the septemnal act had made. That act could have been repealed at any time, if Parliament had deemed it advisable, and no other ground than that of expediency, can now be reasonably urged, for shortening the duration of Parliaments.

The main ground, however, on which this change has been rested, is the propriety of rendering the representatives of the people, more frequently accountable to their constituents. The shorter the period for which authority is entrusted to them,—the more guarded would they be in its exercise, and the more amenable to public opinion. It is said that a Parlament cannot be tuisted, if independent of the people, and exposed to the influence of ministens, for seven years. And again, the circumstances of the country are likely to be changed during so prolonged a period, and the conduct of members, approved at first, may afterwards be condemned.

Arguments against change

may afterwards be condemned

On the other side it has been argued, that in practice no Parliament is permitted to continue longer than six years, and that frequent dissolutions have reduced Parliaments, at several periods, to an average duration of three, or four years. If Parliaments were elected for three years only, they would often be reduced by various contingencies, to annual Parliaments. They are already elected often enough to make them responsible to their constituents, and more frequent elections would

&lt;sup>1</sup> Srr Samuel Romully stated, in accession of Will IV, in 1880,—a. 1818, that out of olivers Rahas—poined of thirty years,—there shame most of Geo III eight land lasted are years Hanard's Deb, 1st Ser, aboung so, average duntion of exert additional route Since.

unduly foment political excitement, and increase the expenses of elections, which are already a just ground of complaint

Of late years the popularity of this question has declined, not so much on account of any theoretical preference for septennial Parliaments, as from a conviction that the House of Commons has become accountable to the people, and prompt in responding to then reasonable desires

The "ballot" is another question repeatedly debated Vote by in Parliament, and a popular topic at the hustings, at public meetings, and in the newspaper press No sooner had the reform act passed, than complaints were made that the elective franchise, so recently enlarged, could not be freely exercised It was said that the landlords in counties, and wealthy customers in towns, coerced the free will of the electors, and forced them to vote against their opinions and consciences. As a protection against such practices, the necessity of secret voting was contended for. To give the franchise, without the means of exercising it, was declared to be a mockery

It was not for the first time that the influence now complained of had been exerted over electors It had formerly been recognised as one of the natural nights of property It was known that a few landowners could nominate the county members They conducted the freeholders to the poll, as naturally as a Highland chieftain led forth his clan to the foray But now a new electoral policy had been commenced The people at large had been enfranchised, and new classes of electors called into existence. The political ties which had bound the electors to the landloids were loosened. and the latter, being deprived of their absolute ascendency, endeavoured to sustain it by other means. The leaseholders enfranchised by the reform act, being the most dependent, were the very class peculiarly needing protection. The ballot had been called by Ciccio the silent assertor of freedom,—tabella, vindex tacita laberiatis, and it was now proposed, in order to ensure freedom of electron.

The ballot has been sought mainly for the protection of voters from intimidation and undue influence: but it has also been recommended as a safeoperd against bribery It has been resisted by arouments too various to be briefly reviewed. The strongest, perhaps, is that every political function being publicly and responsibly exercised, and every debate and vote in Parliament published for the information of the people. - electors can scarcely claim an exemption from that law of publicity, to which their julers and representatives are subject. Why are they alone, to be irresponsible? Apart from theory, its practical efficacy has also been denied. It has been said that if intimidation were intended, means would be taken to discover the votes of electors, in spite of all the machinery of the ballot Nor would bribery be prevented, as a candidate would secure fulfilment of corrupt promises, by making his payment for votes, contangent upon his success at the poll

The advocates of the ballot have, perhaps, exaggerated the advantages of their favoured scheine, while its opponents have magnified its evils and its dangers. It is a measure upon which sincere reformers have been, and continue to be, divided At times, it has made progress in the number and influence of its supporters. Yet such have been its vicissitudes, that it is still difficult for a political observer to divine, whicher it will be suddenly adopted,—in the crisis of some party

strugule,---or be laid aside as a theory for the disputation of namphleteers, and debating societies

In 1833, Mr Grote took possession of the question of the ballot, and from that time until 1839, he contunned to advocate the cause, in a series of temperate and philosophical speeches, as creditable to his political wisdom, as to his learning and ability. He argued in the calm and earnest spirit of the theoretical statesman, not with the fierce temper of the demociat. His honest labours greatly advanced the popularity of the cause, and improved its parliamentary position In 1833 he found but one hundred and six supporters 1, m 1839 he had two hundred and sixteen 2 Mr Grote having retired from Parliament, the question was not allowed to be forgotten In 1842 Mr Ward adopted it s, and since 1848, Mr Henry Berkeley has made it his own 4 With ample stores of fact and aneedote, and with varied resources of humour, he has continued to uppe on the question, year after year, but without increased support.

In 1848 his motion was carried by a majority of five 5 In 1849, it was defeated by a majority of fifty-one in 1852, by a majority of one hundred and two; and in 1860, by a majority of one hundred and seven Such reaction of opinion, upon a popular measure, is more significant of ultimate failure, than a steady position, without progress indeed, vet without reverses.

Since the reform act, the qualification laws, -which Qualificain different forms had existed for one hundred and tion Acts, fifty years,-have passed away It was ostensibly to correct the evils of birbery at elections, that property in land was first proposed as a qualification for a member of Parhament The corruption of boroughs being mainly due to the intrusion of iich commercial men, without local connexion, the natural jealousy of the landowners suggested this restraint upon their rivals. In 1696, the first measure to establish a qualification in land, was received with so much favour, that it passed both Houses, but the king, leaning rather to the commercial interests, withheld his assent In the following year, a similar bill was passed by the Commons, but rejected by the Lords, who had now begun to think that a small landed qualification would increase the influence of the squires, but duminish the authority of the great nobles, who filled the smaller boroughs with members of then own family, and dependents

&lt;sup>1</sup> Hansard's Deb , 3rd Sei , xvii 608—Ayes 106, Noes 211, Ibid xxviii 369, Ibid , xxviv 781, Ibid , xxxvii 7 , Ibid (1898), xl 2 Ibid, xlvm 442-Ayes 210, Noes 333 18 Ibid , lxiv 348 <sup>4</sup> Ibid, c 1225 <sup>5</sup> Ayes 80, Noes 81,

The policy of excluding all but the proprietors of land, from the right of sitting in the House of Commons, was at length adopted in the reign of Queen Anne 1, and was maintained until 1838. In that year this exclusive principle was surrendered, and a new qualification substituted, of the same amount, either in real or personal property, or in both combined 2 In 1858, the law of property qualification was abandoned altogether 8 In its original form, it had been invidious and unjust, and, from its beginning to its end, it had been systematically evaded It would probably not have survived so long the jealousies from which it had sprung, had it not been invested with undue importance, by radical reformers. But when the repeal of this insignificant law was proclaimed as one of the five points of the "Charter," it is not surprising that more moderate politicians should have regarded it as one of the safeguards of the constitution

 <sup>9</sup> Anne, c 5; 33 Geo II c 15
 21 & 22 Vict. c. 26
 1 & 2 Vict e 48.

Since the passing of the reform act, various minor Proceedamendments have been made in the electoral laws The elections registration of electors has been improved and simplified. improved the number of polling-places has been increased2, and the polling reduced, in counties as well as in boroughs, a single day 8 Even the Universities, which had retained their fifteen days of polling, were glad to accept five days, in 1853

Promptitude in election proceedings has further been ensured by the change of some ancient customs The prescriptive period of forty days between the summons of a new Parhament and its meeting - enlarged by custom to fifty days since the Union with Scotland, having become an anomaly in an age of railways and telegraphs, has been reduced to thirty-five 4 Another aucient custom has also given way to a more simple procedure By a recent act the writs for an election are addressed direct to the several returning officers, instead of passing through the sheriff of the county 5

A more general revision of the representative system, Letter meaas settled by the reform acts of 1832, has also been sures of 10the aim of several administrations, and Parliaments For some years, there had been a natural reluctance to disturb the settlement which those important measures had recently effected The old Whig party had regarded it as a constitutional charter, and contended for its "finality" But then advanced Liberal supporters. after many discussions in Parliament, and much acitation and "pressure from without,"-at length prevailed over the more cautious policy of their leaders, and a promise was given, in 1851, that the consideration of the representative system should, at a fitting opportunity, be resumed.

17 Vict, c. 15.

BB 4

&lt;sup>1</sup> 6 & 7 Viet c 18 <sup>2</sup> 6 & 7 Will IV c 102 <sup>3</sup> 5 & 6 Will IV c 30, 16 & <sup>4</sup> By Loid Brougham's 15 Viet c 23 <sup>5</sup> 16 & 17 Viet c 78. 4 By Lord Brougham's Act, 1852,

Reform Bill of 1862

In fulfilment of this promise, Lord John Russell, twenty years after the settlement of 1832, -- proposed its further revision That measure had not proposed to redistribute the franchise, in precise correspondence with the population of different parts of the country Not founded upon theoretical views of equal representation. it had not assumed to frame a new constitution, but had provided a remedy for the worst evils of a faulty and corrupt electoral system It had rescued the representation from a small oligarchy of peers and landowners, and had vested it in the hands of the middle classes But it had spared many boroughs, which were perhaps too small to exercise their suffrage independently, it had over-looked the claims of some considerable places, and had not embraced the working classes within its scheme of enfranchisement Lord John Russell now sought to connect these partial defects, which tune had disclosed in the original measure

He proposed that every existing borough, having less than five hundred electors, should be associated with adjacent places, in the right of returning members, and that Birkenhead and Burnley should be enflanchised. In twenty years there had been a vast increase of population, wealth, and industry, throughout the country. The spread of education and political enlightenment had been rapid. a more instructed generation had grown up - and a marked improvement had

Speech of Lord John Russell, 20th June, 1848
 Ibid, xxix.
 20th Feb 1861, Hansard's Deb 929
 3rd Ser, cxiv, 863
 See also Speech

ausen in the social condition of the working classes It was therefore, thought right and safe to lower the franchise so far as to embrace classes not hitherto included, and particularly the most skilled artificers. men who had given proof of their intelligence and good conduct, by large earnings, and a high position among their fellow workmen With this view, it was proposed to extend the borough franchise to the occupiers of houses of 5l rated value; and the county franchise to tenants-at-will lated at 201, and convholders and leaseholders rated at 51. It was also intended to create a new fianchise, arising out of the annual payment of 40s in direct taxes to the state Lord John Russell's administration soon afterwards resigned, and this measure was withdrawn before the second reading 1

In 1854, Lord John Russell, as a member of Lord Reform Bill Aberdeen's government, proposed another measure, of 1861 more comprehensive than the last It comprised the disfianchisement of nineteen small boroughs, returning twenty-nine members, the deprivation of thirty-three other boloughs of one of their members, and the redistribution of the vacant seals, sixty-six in number2, amongst the counties and larger boroughs, the Iuns of Court, and the University of London It proposed to reduce the franchise in counties to 101, and in boroughs to the municipal rating franchise of 61. Scveral new franchises were also to be added, in order to modify the hard uniformity of the household franchise A salary of 100l a year. an income of 10l from dividends the payment of 40s in direct taxes a degree at any of the universities, and 501 in a savings' bank, were accounted sufficient securities for the proper exercise of the suffrage. In the distribution of seats, a novel principle was to be established, with a view to ensure the representation of minorities. Some counties and other large places were to return three members each, but no elector would be entitled to vote for more than two candidates out of three. This theory of representation, — though very ably advocated by some speculative writers', — found little dravour in Pailament, with men accustomed to determine every disputed question among themselves, by the votes of the majority. The consideration of this measure was postponed, by the outbreak of the war with Russia.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Hansaid's Deb 3rd Ser, exrv. 252,971 Bill, No 48, of 1852 Sudbury and St Albans

The Reform Bill of 1859

The next measure of Parliamentary retorm was proposed in 1859, by the government of Lord Derby Lord Derby, - having been one of the most eloquent, spirited, and courageous of Loid Grey's colleagues in 1832, - was now the leader of the great Conservative party, which had opposed the first reform act But his party, deferring to the judgment of Parliament, had since honourably acquiesced in that settlement Meanwhile, the revision of that measure had been thrice recommended from the throne; and three successive administrations had been pledged to undertake the Some scheme of reform had thus become a political necessity The measure agreed upon by the ministers, and the principles upon which it was founded. were ably explained by Mr Disraeli It was not sought to reconstruct the representation of the country solely on the basis of population and property but having reference to those material elements, as well as to the representation of various interests, and classes of the community,—this measure comprehended some considerable changes. It was not proposed wholly to disfranchise any bolough; but one member was to be taken from fifteen boroughs, having a population under six thousand. Eight of the vacant seats were assigned to the great county populations of Yorkshine, South Lancashire, and Middlesex, and seven to new boroughs; which according to this scheme, would complete the representation of the several interests of the country

, &lt;sup>1</sup> Minorities and Majorities, their Hare on the Election of Repiesen-'relative Rights, by James Garth tathes, 1859 Marshall, 1853, Edinb Rev., July <sup>2</sup> Hansard's Deb., 5:id Sei exxx. 1854, Art vn , and more lately 401, July 2xxxi. 277.

The two previous measures of Lord John Russell had contemplated a reduction of the borough franchise No such reduction was now proposed, but the franchise in counties, was assimilated to that in boroughs Hitherto the borough franchise had been founded upon occupation, and the county franchise generally upon property This distinction it was now proposed to abolish, and to substitute an identity of franchise, between the county and the town The 40s freeholders resident in towns, would be transferred from the constituency of the county, to that of the town Several new fianchises were also to be created, similar to those proposed in 1854, but more comprchensive Men possessed of 10l a year arising from dividends 60l in a savings' bank, or a pension of 201 · lodgers paying 201 a year, - equal to 8s a week graduates of all universities ministers of religion of every denomination members of the legal profession in all its branches . registered medical practitioners; and schoolmasters holding a certificate from the Privy Council, were to be entitled to vote, wherever they were resident And facilities for exercising the franchise, were to be afforded by means of voting papers 1

&lt;sup>1</sup> Hansaid's Deb. 3id Sei, chi 966

Objections urged against this measure

This scheme encountered objections from two dif-Two influential members of the goferent quarters vernment,-Mi Walpole and Mi Henley,-alaimed by the proposed identity of franchise, resigned their seats in the cabinet The Opposition, partly taking up the same ground, were unwilling to deprive the 40s freeholders resident in boroughs, of their county votes, and insisted upon the lowering of the borough suffrage The government, weakened by these resignations, had now to meet a formidable amendment, moved by Lord John Russell on the second reading of the bill, which expressed the views of the Opposition The identity of franchise was objected to by Mr Walpole and Mr Henley, on account of the supposed danger of drawing one broad line between the represented, and the unremesented classes Lord John Russell concurred in this objection, believing that such a principle would eventually lead to electoral districts. He also opposed the bill on two other grounds first, that the 40s fieeholders, being the most liberal element in the county constituencies, ought not to be disfianchised, and secondly, that their admission to the bojough franchise would encourage the manufacture of faggot votes,-hke the old burgage tenure, which had been the means of extending the influence of patrons. He objected to the continuance of the 10l. household suffrage in boroughs, on the ground that considerable classes of people, worthy to be entrusted with votes, had sprung up since that franchise had been established After seven nights' debate, the amendment was carried by a majority of thirty-nine 2 Upon the issue raised by this decision. the government determined to dissolve Parliament, and appeal to the people 1 On the assembling of a new Parliament, the ministers, having failed to secure a majority at the elections, were at once driven from office by an amendment to the address, declaring that they had not the confidence of the House of Commons 2

&lt;sup>1</sup> Hansard's Deb 3rd Ser, clu. <sup>2</sup> Ibid, clu., 389—1157 1058.

And now the question of reform was resumed, once Reform more, by Lord John Russell, on behalf of Lord Palmerston's administration On the 1st March, 1860. he introduced a bill, in accordance with the spirit of the amendment by which he had destroyed the measure of the previous year, but differing materially from the bills of 1852 and 1854 Lake the bill of Lord Derby's covernment, it spared all the smaller boroughs None were to be disfranchised, but it deprived twenty-five boroughs, with a population under seven thousand, of one of then members This disfranchisement fell far short of that proposed in 1854. and it was avowed that if any more places had been condemned, their representatives, combining with the Conservative Opposition, would have succeeded in defeating the bill If such was now the difficulty of contending with these personal and local interests, what · must have been the difficulties of Mr Pitt in 1784, and of Lord Grev in 1832? One minister vainly attempted to buy off his opponents, the other overcame them by strong popular support. The first expedient was now wholly out of the question, the latter source of strength was wanting.

Fifteen of the vacant seats were distributed amongst the counties, and ten given to the larger cities, and some new boroughs The 50l occupation franchise in counties, was reduced to a 101 bond fide holding

Hansard's Deb, 3rd Ser, clur 2 Ibid, clry 98—297, 1301

HOUSE OF COMMONS

The 10l borough fianchise was lowered to 6l, avowedly for the purpose of comprehending many of the working classes. It was calculated that the new franchise would add two hundred thousand electors to the cities and boroughs None of the varied franchises, which had formed part of the bills of 1854 and 1859, were again proposed Sneered at as "fancy franchises," and distrusted as the means of creating fictitious votes. they were now abandoned, and the more rude, but tangible tests of good citizenship inflexibly maintained 1 This bill was defeated, neither by adverse majorities. not by changes in the government, but by delays, and the pressure of other important measures. It was not until the 3rd of May, -after six adjourned debates,that it was read a second time, without a division Discussions were renewed on going into committee, and at length, on the 11th of June, the bill was withdrawn 2 Bills to amend the representation in Scotland and Ireland, which had been hopelessly awaiting discussion, had already been abandoned 8

Ball lost by delays and 6000

Obstacles to Parliamentary Reform

Such obstacles as these,-however harassing and inconvenient,-would have been easily overcome, if the government had been cordially supported by their own. party in the House of Commons, and by popular acclamations But within the walls of the House, parliamentary reform was received with coldness,-if not with ill-discussed repugnance,-even by its professed supporters, and throughout the country, there prevailed the most profound indifference. The cause which had once aroused enthusiasm, now languished from general neglect The press was silent or discouraging, petitions. were not forthcoming. public meetings were not assembled: the people were unmoved Whence this indifference? Why so marked a change of popular feeling, in less than thirty years? The settlement of 1832 had secured the great object of representation, - good government Wise and beneficent measures had been passed enlightened public opinion had been satisfied. The representation was theoretically incomplete, but ' Parliament had been brought into harmony with the interests and sympathies of the people. It had nearly approached Mr Burke's standard, according to whom, "The virtue, spirit, and essence of a House of Commons. consists in its being the express image of the feelings of a nation." The best results of reform had been reaheed the country was prosperous and contented It has ever been the genrus of the English people to love freedom they are roused by mustice they resent a public or private wrong, but they are rarely moved by theoretical grievances Living under a settled form of government, they have cared little for model constitutions, and united in the bonds of a highly civilised society, they have never favoured democracy Again, since 1832, political power has been vested mainly in the middle classes, and the employers of labour, being masters of the representation, are unwilling to share their power with the working classes, by whom they are outnumbered Hence the mertness of existing constituencies They enjoy exclusive political privileges, and desire to maintain them

&lt;sup>2</sup> Ibid, clix 226.
<sup>3</sup> Ibid, 143. 1 Hansard's Deb 31d Sea , clv1. 2050.

One other cause must not be omitted While these moderate measures of reform were being proposed by successive governments, other schemes had been discussed elsewhere,—designed to extend largely the influence of numbers,—and conceived and advocated in the spirit of democracy Such proposals unceased the indisposition of moderate reformers, and of the classes already enfianchised, to forward an extension of the suffrage At the same time, the advocates of more comprehensive schemes of reform,—while they coldly accepted measures falling fits short of their own,—were not unwilling that they should be postponed to some period more promising for the adoption of their advanced principles. And thus, with the tacit acquiescence of all pathes, the question of parliamentary reform was again suffected to sleep

Burke's Works, 11, 288 (Present-Discontents).

CHAP VII

PELATIONS OF PARLIAMENT TO THE CROWN, THE LAW, AND THE PROPLE. - ABUSES OF PRIVILEGE IN PROCEEDINGS AGAINST WILKLS - EX-CLUSION OF STRANGURS -- PURGICATION OF DERATTS RESTRAINED --CONTEST WITH THE PRINTERS, 1771 - PREEDOM OF REPORTING ESTA-BUSHED - ITS POLITICAL RESULTS - ENTIRE PUBLICITY OF PRO-CEEDINGS IN PARLIAMENT - PETITIONS - PLEDGES OF MEMBERS -- CONTLICT OF PRIVILEGE AND LAW -- INCREASED POWER, AND MODERATION OF THE COMMONS - CONTROL OF PARLIAMENT OVER THE LARGUTIVE - IMPLACEMENTS - CONTROL OF THE COMMONS OVER LAXLS AND EXPENDITURE - SELTCH OF PARLIAMENTARY OBSTORY

WE have traced, in the last chapter, the changes which have been successively introduced into the constitution of the House of Commons,—the efforts made to reduce the influence of the Crown, the ministers, and the aristociacy over its members,-to restrain corruption, and encourage an honest and independent discharge of its duties to the public We have now to regard Parhament,-and mainly the House of Commons,-under another aspect to observe how it has wielded the great powers entrusted to it,-in what manner it has respected the prerogatives of the Crown, the authority of the law, and other jurisdictions,-and how far it has acknowledged its own responsibilities to the people

Throughout its history, the House of Commons has Contests of had struggles with the Crown, the House of Lords, the the Comcourts of law, the press, and the people At one time questions straining its own powers, at another resisting encroachments upon its just authority successful in asserting its rights, but failing in its usurpations, it has gradually assumed its proper position in the State,—controlling all other powers, but itself controlled and corruption, was also marked by the most flagrant abuses of its power. And the more it has been brought under the control of public opinion,—the greater have been its moderation and forbearance.

The regn of George III witnessed many remarkable changes in the relations of Paulament to the people, which all contributed to increase its responsibility Moial causes also extended the control of the people over their rulers, even more than amendments of the law, by which constitutional abuses were corrected Events occuried early in this regn, which brought to a decisive issue, important questions affecting the privileges of Paulament, and the rights of the subject

The hbetty of the subject had already been outnaged by the imprisonment of Wilkes, under a general warrant, for the publication of the celebrated No 45 of the "North Briton," when Parliament thrust itself forward, as if to prove how privilege could still be abused, as well as prerogative Being a member of the House of Commons, Wilkes had been released from his imprisonment, by the Court of Common Pleas, on a writ of habeus corpus, on the ground of his privilege?

The only exceptions to the puvilege of freedom from arrest, which had ever been recognised by Pailament, were "treason, felony, and breach of the peace," "or refusing to give suiety of the peace." The Court properly acknowledged the privilege, as defined by Pailament itself, and discharged Wilkes from his imprisonment He was afterwards served with a subpoena, on an information against him in the Court of King's Bench, to which, on the ground of privilege, he had not entered an appearance On the meeting of Pailiament, however, in November, 1763, he lost no tame in stating that if his privilege should be affirmed, he was ready to waive it, " and to put himself upon a jury of his countrymen "1 Parliament,-which had ordinarily been too prone to enlarge its privileges - was now the first to abridge and surrender them Eager to second the vengeance of the king, the Commons commenced by voting that the "North Buton," No 45, was "a false, scandalous, and malicious libel," and ordering it to be burned by the hands of the common hangman Then, in defiance of then own previous resolutions, they resolved "that privilege of Parliament does not extend to the ease of writing and publishing seditious libels, nor ought to be allowed to obstruct the ordinary course of law, in the speedy and effectual prosecution of so hemous and dangerous offence "2

&lt;sup>1</sup> See Chap. X , on the Liberty of <sup>2</sup> Wilson's Reports, 11 150. St the Subject. Ti , vx. 530.

To the pumeiple of the latter part of this resolution there can be little exception, but here it was applied are post fucto to a particular case, and used to justify a judicial decision, contany to law and usage. Mr. Pitt, while he denounced the libel and the libeller, remonstrated against the abandonment of the privilege. These resolutions being communicated to the Lords, were agreed to, but not without a most able protest, signed by seventeen Peers, against the surrender of the privilege of Parliament "to serve a particular purpose, expost fucto, et pendente lite, in the Courts below." <sup>3</sup>

&lt;sup>1</sup> Peol Hist, xv 1801 <sup>2</sup> Com Jonn, xxx 680, Pau Hist, xv 1892–1378 <sup>3</sup> Paul Hist, xv 1897, Ann

Such a libel as that of Wilkes, a few years later, would have attracted little notice, but at that time it is not surprising that it provoked a legal prosecution It was, however, a libel upon the king's ministers, tather than upon the king himself Upon Parliament it contained nothing but an obscure innuendo 1, which alone brought the matter legitimately within the limits of puvilege There were, doubtless, many precedents,to be avoided, rather than followed,-for pronouncing writings to be seditious, but sedition is properly an offence cognisable by law So far as the libel affected the character of either House, it was within the scope of privilege, but its seditious character could only be determined by the courts, where a prosecution had already been commenced. To condemn the libel as seditious was, therefore, to anticipate the decision of the proper tribunal, and to order it to be burned by the hands of the common hangman, - if no great punishment to the libeller, - yet branded him as a criminal before his trial The mob took part with Wilkes,assailed the Sheriffs who were executing the orders of Parlament, and having rescued part of the obnoxious "North Briton" from the flames, bore it m triumph to Temple Bar, beyond the limits of the city jurisdiction. Here they made another bonfire, and burned a jack-boot and a petticoat, the favourite emblems of the late unpopular minister Lord Bute, and the Pimcess 2 This outrage was resented by both Houses, an address being voted for a prosecution of all persons concerned in it,3

&lt;sup>1</sup> The passage reflecting upon debt on the Civil List, already above Parlament was as follows "As half a year in allear, shows pretty to the entire approbation of Paulato the additional photostation of ratings and standard of the ment [of the peace] which is so vamly boasted of, the world knows how that was obtained The large 2 Walpole's Mem., i 380, 2 Pail Hist, vv 1380,

clearly the transactions of the win-

The severities of Parhament were still pursuing Wilkes ab-Wilkes He had been ordered by the Commons to sconds, and attend in his place, with a view to further proceedings, but having been wounded in a duel, - provoked and forced upon him by Mr Martin, one of their own members1,-his attendance was necessarily deferred Meanwhile, expecting no mercy either from the Crown or from Parliament, - tracked by spies, and beset with petty persecutions2, - he prudently withdrew to Paris Being absent, in contempt of the orders of the House, the proceedings were no longer staved; and evidence having been taken at the bar, of his being the author and publisher of the "North Briton," No 45, he was expelled the House. In expelling a member, whom they had adjudged to have committed the offence of writing and publishing a seditious libel, the Commons acted within their powers, but the vote was piecipitate and vindictive He was about to be tried for his offence, and they might at least have waited for his conviction, instead of prejudging his cause, and anticipating his legal punishment But the Lords far outstripped the other House, in Proceedthis race of persecution. On the first day of the lings of the session, while the Commons were dealing with the "North Briton," Lord Sandwich complained to the Lords of an "Essay on Woman," with notes, to which the name of Bishop Warburton was affixed, and of another minted paper called "The Veni Creator paraphrased" Of the "Essay on Woman," thuteen copies only had been printed, in Wilkes' private printingpress there was no evidence of publication, and a proof-copy of the work had been obtained through the treachery of one of his printers If these writings were obscene and blasphemous, their author had exposed himself to the law but the only pietence for noticing them in Parliament, was the absurd use of the name of a bishop, -a member of their Lordships' House Hence it became a breach of privilege! This ingenious device was suggested by the Chancellor, Lord Henley, and Mr Grenville obtained the bishop's consent to complain of the outrage, in his name 1 But it was beneath the dignity of the House to notice such writings, obtained in such a manner, and it was notorious that the politics of the anthor were the true ground of offence, and not his blasphemy, or his irreverence to the bishop. The proceeding was the more ridiculous, from the complaint of obscemty having been made by the most profligate of peers,—"Satan rebuking sin "2" Nevertheless the Lords were not ashamed to examine the printers, from whom the proof-sheets had been obtained, in order to prove that Wilkes was the author They at once addressed the king to order a prosecution of Wilkes, but as he was, at this time, laid up with his wounds, proceedings against him for the breach of privilege were postponed On the 24th January, when he had escaped from then jurisdiction, they ordered him into custody 8 They were at least spared the opprobrium of further oppression, but their proceedings had not escaped the indignation and ridicule which they deserved

See Corresp , Paul Hist , xv <sup>2</sup> Grenville Papers, 11 155 1856, n

Leaving Wilkes, for a time, as a popular martyr, and passing over his finther contests with the govern-

&lt;sup>1</sup> Grenville Papers, n 154 Grienville Papers, n 154 into an applause of application, and the nick-name of Jemmy Twitcher performed at Covent-Garden Theatic soon after this event, the whole audience, when Macheath says, 'That Jemmy Twitchershould peach me, I own surprises me, burst out

stuck by the carl so as almost to occasion the disuse of his title "-Walpole's Mem , 1, 314 Parl Hist, xv 1346

ment in the courts of law .-- we shall find him, a few years later, again coming into collision with Parhament, and becoming the successful champion of popular rights

The discussions on his case were scarcely concluded, "Diont Le when a complaint was made to the Lords, by Lord Ror" or dered to be Lyttelton, of a book with the title of " Droit Le Roi " burned. It was the very opposite of Wilkes' writings, - being a high prerogative treatise, founded upon statutes, precedents, and the dicta of lawvers before the Revolution It was too monstrous to be defended by any one, and, like the "North Briton," it was ordered by both Houses to be burned by the hands of the common hangman 1 There was no pretence for dealing with this case as a breach of privilege, but as the popular cause had suffered from the straining of privilege, in the person of Wilkes, no one attempted to save this ultra-loyal treatise from the flames

At the dissolution of Parliament in 1768, Wilkes, who Wilkes rehad, in the meantime, resided abroad,—an exile and furned for an outlaw. — offered himself as a candidate for the city 1768 of London He was defeated, but the memory of his wrongs was revived, and with no other claim to nonular favour, he found himself the idol of the people He now became a candidate for Middlesex, and was returned by a large majority His triumph was celebrated by his partisans; who forced the inhabitants of London to illuminate, and join in their cry of "Wilkes and liberty,"-marking every door, as they passed along, with the popular number "45."

But he was soon to suffer the penalties of his past His imporoffences On the first day of the ensuing session, having soment by appeared before the Court of King's Bench on his outlawry, he was committed on a capias utiligatum Rescued by the mob, he again surrendered himself, and his imprisonment was the unhappy occasion of roots, and of a collision between the military and the people. His outlawry was soon afterwards reversed, but he was sentenced to two years' imprisonment for his black.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Parl Hist, xv 1418, Lords' Journ, xxx 477, &c , Walpole's Mem, 1 383

During the first session of this Parliament, therefore, Wilkes was unable to take his seat, and as yet no proceedings were commenced against him in the House of Commons At the opening of the second session, in November, he brought himself into notice by accusing Lord Mansfield, - in a petition to the House, - of having altered the record on his trial, and Mr Webb. the Sohcitor of the Treasury, of having bribed Cury, the punter, with public money, to appear as a witness against him His charges were voted to be groundless, but they served the purpose of exciting popular sympathy He was brought down to Westminster to prove them, attended by a large concourse of people1, and for a moment he perplexed the House by submitting whether, being a member, he could stand at the bar, without having taken the oaths, and delivered in his qualification But he soon received the obvious answer that being in custody at the bai, the acts affecting members sitting in the House, did not apply to his case 2 But a graver matter in which Wilkes had involved

Internal mount of the considered He had published a letter from Lord Weymouth to the magnitures of Suriey, advising them to call in the military for the suppression of nots, with a prefatory letter of his own,

Walpole's Mem , m. 314,
 Com Journ , Nov 14th, 1768, 46—131

in which he had applied the strongest language to the Secretary of State, and had designated the late collision between the troops and the populace in St George's Fields, as a bloody massacre Here again, a strange and 111egular proceeding was resorted to The letter was a libel upon a Secretary of State, as an officer of the Crown, who, being also a peer, complained of it as a breach of privilege But instead of proceeding against the author in the House of Lords, the paper was voted an insolent, scandalous, and seditions libel, and a conference was held with the Commons on the conduct of Wilkes, as a member of their House 1 They immediately took the matter up . and rushing headlong into a quarrel which did not concern them, called upon Wilkes for his defence He boldly confessed himself the author of the prefatory letter, and gloried in having brought " to light that bloody scroll" of Lord Weymouth The letter was voted to be an insolent, scandalous, and seditious libel A motion was then made for the expulsion Resoluof Wilkes, founded upon several distinct grounds. first, his sand this last seditious libel, which, if a breach of privilege, sion was cognisable by the Lords, and not by the Commons, and, if a seditious libel, was punishable by law secouldy, the publication of the "North Briton," five years before, for which Wilkes was already under sentence, and had suffered expulsion from a former Parliament thirdly, his impious and obscene libels, for which he was already suffering punishment, by the judgment of a criminal court, and, fourthly, that he was under sentence of the court to suffer twenty-two months' imprisonment

Such were the cumulative charges, upon which it was now proposed to expel him. Nothing can be more undoubted than the right of the House of Commons to expel one of its own members, for any offence which, in its judgment, deserves such punishment,-whether it be a breach of privilege or not But here the exercise of this right was unjust and oppressive It was forcibly argued, that for all the offences enumerated, but one. Wilkes had already suffered, and was still suffering For his remaining offence, -the libel on a Secretary of State,-it was not the province of the House to condemn and punish him by this summary process. It should be left to the courts to try him, -and, if found guilty, to inflict the punishment prescribed by law For his old offences he could scarcely be expelled. During a whole session he had been a member, and yet they had not been held to justify his expulsion. Then why should they now call for such severity? Clearly on the ground of his hbel on Lord Weymouth The very enumeration of so many grounds of expulsion, implied their separate weakness and insufficiency; while it was designed to attract the support of members, influenced by different reasons for their votes These arguments were urged by Mr Burke, Mr Pitt, Mr Dowdeswell, M1 Beckford, Mr. Cornwall, and, above all, by M1 George Grenville 1 The masterly speech of the latter does great credit to his judgment and foresight When a minister, he had been the first to bring the House of Commons into collision with Wilkes, but he now recoiled from the struggle which was impending. Having shown the mjustice of the proposed punishment, he proceeded to show its impolicy and danger. He predicted that Wilkes would be re-elected, and that the House would have but two alternatives - both objectaonable, either to expel him again, and suspend the issue of the writ for the entire Parhament, or to declare

<sup>1</sup> Lords' Journ , xxxn 213

&lt;sup>1</sup> Parl, Hist, vvi 546, Cavendish Deb. 1, 151,

anothe candidate,—with a minority of votes,—to be elected, on the ground of Wilkes' legal disquilification. In both cases the law would be violated, and the rights of the electors invaded. And in warning them of the dangerous contest they were about to commence, he richted that the power and popularity of the demagogue would suddenly be reduced, if he were relieved from his martyrdom, and admitted to the legislature, where his true character would be discovered

But all these arguments and cautions, were moffered in vain The House,-making common cause with the court, - had resolved to scourge the insolent libeller who had intruded himself into their councils; and, regardless of future consequences, they voted his expulsion by a large majority According to Burke, "the point to be gained by the cabal was this that a precedent should be established, tending to show that the favour of the people was not so sure a road as the favour of the court, even to popular honours and popular trusts" "Popularity was to be rendered, if not duectly penal, at least highly dangerous "1 This view, however, is too deep and philosophical, to have been the true one The court party, having been defied and insulted by a political opponent, were determined to crush him, and scarcely stopped to consider whether the laws were outraged or not

Up to this time, whatever may have been the injustice and impolicy of their proceedings, the Commons had not exceeded their legal powers. The grounds on which they had expelled a member may have been insufficient, but of their sufficiency, they alone were competent to judge

They were now, however, about to commit unwar- Wilkes re-

&lt;sup>1</sup> Present Discontents, Works, 11 294

rantable excesses of jurisdiction, and to violate the clearest punciples of law As Mi Grenville had predicted. Wilkes was immediately re-elected without opposition 1 The next day, on the motion of Lord Strange, the House resolved that Mr Wilkes "having been, in this session of Parliament, expelled the House. was and is incapable of being elected a member, to serve in this present Parliament" The election was accordingly declared void, and a new writ issued? There were precedents for this course 8, for this was not the first time the Commons had exceeded then nuisdiction, but it could not be defended upon sound principles of law If by a vote of the House, a disability, unknown to the law, could be created,-any man who became obnoxious might, on some ground or other, be declared incapable Incapacity would then be declared, -not by the law of the land, but by the arbitiary will of the House of Commons On the other hand, the House felt strongly that then power of expulsion was almost futile, if their judgment could be immediately set aside by the electors, or, as it was but by General Conway, "if a gentleman who returns himself for any particular borough, were to stand up and say that he would, in opposition to the powers of the House, insist upon being a member of Parliament "4 Again, with still increasing popularity, Wilkes was re-elected without opposition, and again a new writ was issued In order to prevent a repetition of these fruitless proceedings, an alternative, - already pointed out Opposed by Mi Grenville,—was now adopted Colonel Luttrell. a member, vacated his seat, and offered himself as Luthell.

His cleetion de clared void.

Agam re-elected, and election declared void

<sup>1</sup> So stated by a member who was present, Paul Hist, vvi 580 8 See May's Law of Parliament (4th Ed ), 59, Townsend's Mem . * Feb 17th, 1769, Cavendish ii 100

Deb , 1 345 4 Cavendish Deb. 1 352

large majority. He received one thousand one hundied and forty-three votes. Colonel Luttrell only two hundred and nmety-six. There were also two other candidates, Mi. Sergeant Whitaker and Mr. Roache. the former of whom had five votes, and the latter none The Commons immediately pronounced the Again toneturn of Wilkes to be null and void, and, having but Colonel called for the poll-books, proceeded to vote, -though Intrell not without a strenuous opposition,-that Hemy Lawes Luttrell ought to have been returned. To declare a candidate, supported by so small a number of votes, the legal representative of Middlesex, was a startling step in the progress of this painful contest, but the ultimate seating of another candidate, notwithstanding Wilkes' majorities, was the inevitable result of the decision which affirmed his incapacity Leave was given to petition the House against Colonel Luttrell's election, within fourteen days Of this permission the electors soon availed themselves: and, on the 8th May, they were heard by counsel, at the bar of the House Their arguments were chiefly founded upon the original illegality of the vote, by which Wilkes' incapacity had been declared, and were ably supported in debate, particularly by Mr Wedderbuin, Mi Buike, and Mr George Grenville2, but the election of Colonel Luttrell was confirmed by a majority of sixty-nine.

Wilkes was now effectually excluded from Parlia-Popularity ment, but his popularity had been increased, while the of Wilkes House, and all concerned in his oppression, were the objects of popular indignation As some compensation

April 14th, 1769, Cavendish
 Deb , i 360—386 Ayes 197, Noes
 Cavendish Deb , 1 406

for his exclusion from the House of Commons, Wilkes was elected an alderman of the city of London A hiberal subscription was also raised, for the payment of his debts.

Efforts to reverse the proceedings against him

By Lord Chatham, Jan. 1770 So dangerous a precedent was not suffered to rest unquestioned Not only the partisans of Wilkes, but the statesmen and lawyers opposed to the government, continued to protest against it, until it was condemned

On the 9th January, 1770, Lord Chatham, -re-appearing in the House of Lords after his long prostration. - moved an amendment to the address, denouncing the late proceedings in the House of Commons. as "refusing, by a resolution of one branch of the legislature, to the subject his common right, and depriving the electors of Middlesex of their free choice of a representative" Lord Camden, the Chancellor, now astomshed the Lords by a statement "that for some time he had beheld with silent indignation, the arbitrary measures which were pursuing by the ministry," and, "that as to the meanacitating vote, he considered it as a direct attack upon the first principles of the constitution "2 Lord Mansfield, while he said that his opinion upon the legality of the proceedings of the House of Commons was "locked up in his own breast, and should die with him," (though for what reason it is not easy to explain,) argued that in matters of election the Commons had a complete jurisdiction, without appeal, that their decisions could only be reversed by themselves, or by Act of Parhament; and that except in discussing a bill, the Lords could not inquire into the question, without violating the privileges of the other House.

¹ Pail Hist, xvi 653 the Gentleman's Mag of Jan, 1770, ¹ This speech is not reported in a note, Pail Hist, xvi 044, n the Pail Hist, but is printed from

Lord Chatham rephed in his finest manner Lord Mansfield's remarks on the invasion of the privileges of the other House, called forth this comment. " What is this mysterious power,-undefined by law, unknown to the subject, which we must not approach without awe, nor speak of without reverence, - which no man may question, and to which all men must submit? My Lords, I thought the slavish doctrine of passive obedience had long since been exploded, and when our kings were obliged to confess that their title to the crown, and the rule of their government, had no other foundation than the known laws of the land, I never expected to hear a divine right, or a divine infallibility attributed to any other branch of the legislature" He then procoeded to affirm that the Commons " have betrayed their constituents, and violated the constitution Under pictence of declaring the law, they have made a law, and united in the same persons, the office of legislator and of judge "1 His amendment was negatived, but the string cloquence and constitutional reasoning of so emment a statesman, added weight to Wilkes' cause

In the Commons also, very strong opinions were expressed on the mjustice of Wilkes' exclusion Sir Diagnam to George Savile especially distinguished himself by the Warmth of his language, and accused the House of having betrayed the rights of its constituents. Being threatened with the Tower, he twice repeated his opinion; and, — declining the friendly intervention of Colonel Conway and Lord North, who attributed his language to the heat of debate,—he assured the House that if he was ma rage, "he had been so ever since the fatal vote was passed, and should be so till it is rescunded" Mr Sergeant Glynn thought "his declaration not only innocent, but laudable. A formidable opposition showed itself throughout the debate, and while in the Louds, the Chancello had pronounced his opinion against the meapacitating vote,—in the Commons, the Soliento-General, Mr Duming, also spoke and voted against the government. The question had thus assumed a formidable aspect, and led to changes, which speedily ended in the bleaking up of the Duke of Graffon's administration.

<sup>1</sup> Parl Hist., xvi 647

Mi Doudeswell's resolutions On the 26th January, 1770, Mr Dowdeswell moved a resolution in a committee of the whole House, "That this House in its judicature in matters of election, is bound to judge according to the law of the land, and the known and established law and custom of Parhament, which is part thereof." This premiss could neither be denied not assented to by the government without embaniassment, but Loid North adioutly followed it out by a conclusion "that the judgment of this House was agreeable to the said law of the land, and fully authorised by the law and custom of Panhament." On the 31st January, Mi Dowdeswell repeated his attack in another form, but with no better success?

Lord Rockingham's motion, 2nd Feb, 1770

The matter was now again taken up in the House of Lords. On the 2nd February, in committee on the state of the nation, Lord Rockingham moved a resolution similar to that of Mr Dowdeswell* Though unsuccessful, it called foith another powerful speech from Lord Chatham, and a piotest signed by forty-two peers The rejection of this motion was immediately followed,—without notice, and after twelve o'clock at night,—by a motion of Lord Marchmont, that to impeach a judgment of the House of Commons would be a breach of the constitutional right of that House Lord Camden, being accused by Lord Sandwich of duplicity, in having concealed his opinion as to the illegality of the incapacitating vote, while a member of the cabinet, asserted that he had frequently declared it to be both illegal and imprudent. On the other hand, the Duke of Grafton and Lord Wevmouth complained that he had always withdrawn from the Council Board to avoid giving his opinion .a cucumstance explained by Lord Camden on the ground that as his advice had been already rejected. and the cabinet had resolved upon its measures, he dechied giving any further opinion 1 In either case, it seems, there could have been no doubt of his disanproval of the course adopted by ministers

&lt;sup>1</sup> Paul Hist, xvi 707 <sup>2</sup> Ibid, 800

<sup>3</sup> Ibid, 814

The next effort made in Parliament, in reference to Wilkes' case, was a motion by Mi Herbeit for a bill to regulate the consequences of the expulsion of members But as this bill did not reverse, or directly condemn the proceedings in the case of Wilkes, it was not very waimly supported by the Opposition, and numerous amendments having been made by the supporters of government, by which its character became wholly changed, the bill was withdrawn 2

The scene of this protracted contest was now varied The atv for a time Appeals to Parliament had been made in the king. vam, and the city of London resolved to carry up their 1770 complaints to the thione A petition had been presented to the king in the previous year, to which no answer had been returned And now the Lord Mayor, aldermen, and livery, in Cominon Hall assembled, agreed to an "address, remonstrance, and petition" to the king.

Paul Hist, xvi 823, <sup>2</sup> Ibid, 830 — 833, Cavendish Deb , 1 435

which, whatever the force of its statements, was conceived in a tone of unexampled boldness "The majority of the House of Commons," they said, "have deprived your people of then dearest mehts. They have done a deed more rumous in its consequences than the levying of ship-money by Charles I, or the dispensing power assumed by James II " They concluded by praying the king "to restore the constitutional government and quiet of his people, by dissolving the Parliament and removing his evil ministers for ever from his councıls "1

In his answer, his Majesty expressed his concern that any of his subjects " should have been so far misled as to offer him an address and remonstrance, the contents of which he could not but consider as disrespectful to himself, injurious to Parliament, and irreconcilable to the principles of the constitution "2

The Commons, whose acts had been assailed by the remonstrance, were prompt in rebuking the city, and pressing forward in support of the king. They declared the conduct of the city "highly unwairantable," and tending "to distuib the peace of the kingdom," and having obtained the concurrence of the Lords, a joint address of both Houses, conveying this opinion, was presented to the king In their zeal, they had overlooked the unseemliness of lowering both Houses of Parliament to a level with the corporation of the city of London, and of wrangling with that body, at the foot of the throne The city was ready with a rejoinder, in the form of a further address and remonstrance to the kmg

&lt;sup>1</sup> The address is printed at length, cound to his courtiers, and burst out laughing —Public Advertises. cited Cavendish Deb, 1 570 | langling —Public Advertises, cited

2 Having returned this answer, in Lord Rockingham's Mem, 11

174.

Lord Chatham, meanwhile, and many of the leaders Lord Chatof the Whig party, saw, in the king's answer, couse-demans the quences dangerous to the right of petationing Writing saw; amto Lord Rockingham, April 29th, Lord Chatham said . "A more unconstitutional piece never came from the throne, nor any more dangerous, if left unnoticed" And on the 4th of May, not deterred by the joint address aheady agreed to by both Houses, he moved a resolution in the House of Lords, that the advice inducing his Majesty to give that answer "is of the most dangerous tendency," as "the exercise of the clearest lights of the subject to petition the king for rechess of gnievances, had been checked by renumand" He maintained the constitutional right of the subject to petition for redress of all givenances, and the justice of the complaints which the city of London had laid at the foot of the throne But the motion provoked little discussion, and was rejected 2 And again, on the 14th May, Lord Chatham moved an address for a dissolution of Parliament But all strangers, except peers' sons and members of the House of Commons, having been excluded from this debate, no record of it has been preserved The question was called for at nine o'clock, and negatived 8

On the 1st of May, Lord Chatham presented a bill Lord for reversing the several adjudications of the House Chatham's bill to 10of Commons, in Wilkes' case. The bill, after reciting verse the all these resolutions, declared them to be "arbitrary of the Comand illegal," and they were "reversed, annulled, and 1770. made void." Lord Camden said, "The judgment passed upon the Middlesex election, has given the constitution a more dangerous wound than any which were given during the twelve years' absence of Parliament in the reign of Charles I," and he trusted that its reversal would be demanded, session after session, until the people had obtained redress — Lord Mansfield depicented any interference with the privileges of the Commons, and the bill was rejected by a large maiority. I

¹ Rockingham Mem, n 177, 2 Paul Hist, vvi 986 Woodfall's Junius, n 104
² Paul Hist, vvi 986
³ Ibid, 979

Lord Chatham's resolution, 5th Dec, 1770

Duke of Richmond's motion, April 1771

The next session witnessed a renewal of discussions upon this popular question On the 5th December. Lord Chatham moved another resolution, which met the same fate as his previous motions on the subject 2 On the 30th April, the Duke of Richmond moved to expunge from the journals of the House the resolution of the 2nd of February, 1770, in which they had deprecated any interference with the jurisdiction of the Commons, as unconstitutional He contended that if such a resolution were suffered to remain on record, the Commons might alter the whole law of elections, and change the franchise by an arbitrary declaration, and yet the Lords would be precluded from remonstrance Lord Chatham repeated his opinion, that the Commons "had daingly violated the laws of the land," and declared that it became not the Lords to remain "tame spectators of such a deed, if they would not be deemed accessory to their guilt, and branded with treason to their country" The ministers made no reply, and the question was negatived 8

A few days afterwards, Lord Chatham moved an address for a dissolution, on the ground of the violations of law by the Commons in the Middlesex

&lt;sup>1</sup> Paul Hist, xvi 955, Walpole's pure seded by adjournment 177.

Paul Hist, xvi 1302 It was supereded by adjournment Pul 177.

Paul Hist, vvi 1304

election, and the contest which had lately arisen between them and the city magistracy 1, but found no more than twenty-three supporters 2

The concluding incidents of the Middlesex election may now be briefly told, before we advert to a still more important conflict which was raging at this time, with the privileges of the Commons, and the new embarrassments which Wilkes had raised

In the next session, Sn George Savile, in order to Sn George renew the annual protest against the Middlesex election, moved for a bill to secure the rights of electors, 1772 with respect to the eligibility of persons to serve in Parliament Lord North here, declared, that the proceedings of the Commons had "been highly consistent with justice, and the law of the land, and that to his dying day he should continue to approve of them" The motion was defeated by a majority of forty-six 8

In 1773, Mr Wilkes brought his case before the Mr Wilkes House, in the shape of a frivolous complaint against of the Dethe Deputy-Clerk of the Crown, who had refused to puty-Clerk give him a certificate, as one of the members for Crown Middlesex Sir G Savile, also, renewed his motion for a bill to secure the rights of electors, and found one hundred and fifty supporters 4 Mr Burke took this occasion to predict that, "there would come a time when those now in office would be reduced to their penitentials, for having turned a deaf ear to the voice of the people" In 1774, Sir G Savile renewed his motion for a bill to secure the rights of electors, with the usual result 5

The Parliament, which had been in continual con- Wilkes

See mpa, p 413
 May 1st, 1771, Pail Hist, xvii 224 Feb 27th, 1772, abid, 318 4 Paul Hist, xvii 838. 5 Ibid, 1057

the new Patha ment, 1774 flict with Wilkes for five years, was now dissolved, and Wilkes was again returned for Middlesex. According to the resolution of the Commons, his meapacity had been himited to the late Parhament, and he now took his seat without fruther molestation. Before the meeting of Parliament, Wilkes had also attained the highest civic honour, — being elected Lord Mayor of London.

Moves to expunge the resolu-

He did not fail to take advantage of his new mivileges, and on the 22nd February, 1775, he moved that the resolution which had declared his incapacity. be expunsed from the rounnals, "as subversive of the nights of the whole body of electors" He said. ' the people had made his cause then own, for they saw the powers of government exerted against the constitution, which was wounded through his sides" He recapitulated the en constances of his case, referred . very cleverly to the various authorities and precedents. and showed the dangerous consequences of allowing a resolution to remain upon the journals, which was a violation of the law He was ably supported by Mi Sergeant Glynn, Sn George Savile, and Mr Wedderbuin, and in the division secured one hundred and seventy-one votes 1

He renewed this motion in 1776<sup>2</sup>, in 1777<sup>3</sup>, in 1779<sup>3</sup>, and in 1781<sup>3</sup>. At length, on the 3rd of May, 1782, he proposed it for the last time, and with signal spacess. The Rockingham ministry was in office, and had resolved to condemit the proceedings of the Commons, which its leading members had always disapproved. Mr. Fox was now the only statesman of any eminence, by whom Wilkes's motion was opposed. He had always maintained that the Commons had not exceeded then powers, and he still consistently supported that opinion, in opposition to the premier and the leaders of his party Wilkes's motion was now carried by a trumphant majority of sixty-eight, and by order of the House, all the declarations, orders and resolutions, respecting the Middlesex election, were expunged from the journals, as being subversive of the jights of the whole body of electors in this kingdom 1

2 Ibid , 1336

<sup>171</sup> to 239, Parl. Hist, aviin

* Hist, xviii * Hist, xx 193 * Hist, xx 144 * Hist, xx 99

Thus at length, this weary contest was brought to a Abuses of A former House of Commons, too eager in its their vengeance, had exceeded its powers, and now a suc-danger ceeding Parhament reversed its judgment. This decision of 1782, stands out as a waining to both Houses, to act within the limits of their jurisdiction, and in strict conformity with the laws An abuse of privilege is even more dangerous than an abuse of pierogative In the one case, the wrong is done by an irresponsible body in the other the ministers who advised it, are open to censure and punishment. The judgment of offences especially, should be guided by the severest principles of law Mr Burke applied to the judicature of privilege, in such cases, Lord Bacon's description of the Star Chamber,-" a court of criminal equity " saying, "a large and liberal construction in ascertaining offences, and a discretionary power in punishing them, is the idea of criminal equity, which is in truth a monster in jurisprindence"2 The vindictive exercise of privilege,-once as frequent as it was lawless,-was now discredited and condemned

But before Wilkes had obtained this crowning triumph Exclusion over the Commons, he had contrived to raise another from destorm against their privileges, which produced conse-bates

Ayos, 115, Noes, 47, Parl Present Discontents, Works, 11 Hist xxii 1407

quences of greater constitutional importance, and again this bold and artful demagogue became the instrument, by which popular liberties were extended.

Among the privileges of Parliament, none had been more frequently exercised by both Houses, than the exclusion of strangers from their deliberations, and restraints upon the publication of debates. The first of these privileges is very ancient, and probably origmated in convenience, rather than in any theory of secrecy in their proceedings. The members met not so much for debate, as for deliberation they were summoned for some particular business, which was soon disposed of; and as none but those summoned, were expected to attend, the chambers in which they assembled, were simply adapted for their own accommodation Hence the occasional intrusion of a stranger was an meonvenience, and a disturbance to the House He was in the midst of the members, - standing with them in the gangway, - or taking his place, where none but members had the privilege of sitting Such intrusion resembled that of a man who, in the present day, should force his way into Brookes's or the Carlton, and mingle with the members of the club. Some strangers even entered the House, pretending to be members 1 Preeautions were necessary to prevent confusion; for even so late as 1771 a stranger was counted in a division 2 Hence, from early times, the intrusion of a stranger was generally punished by his immediate commitment, or reprimand 8 The custom afterwards served as an auxiliary to the most valuable of all privileges,-the freedom of speech. What a member said in his place,

Mr. Porne, March. 5th, 1557,
 Ibid, 1 105, 118, 417, 484,
 Mr. Bukoley, May 14th, 1614
 Com. Journ, xxxiii 212

might indeed be reported to the king, or given in evidence against him in the Court of King's Bench, or the Stannary Court, by another member of the House. but strangers might be there, for the very purpose of noting his words, for future condemnation. So long, therefore, as the Commons were obliged to protect themselves against the rough hand of prerogative, they strictly enforced the exclusion of strangers

Long after that danger had passed away, the privi- Relaxation lege was maintained as a matter of custom, rather than of the privilege of policy At length apprehensions arose from another quarter, and the privilege was asserted as a protection to Parliament, against the clamours and intimidation of the people But the enforcement of this privilege was gradually relaxed When the debates in Pailiament began to excite the interest of the public, and to attract an eager audience, the presence of strangers was connived at They could be dismissed in a moment, at the instance of any member, but the Speaker was not often called upon to enforce the orders of the House Towards the middle of last century, attendance upon the debates of both Houses of Parliament, had become a fashionable amusement On the 9th of December. 1761, the interest excited by a debate in the Commons, on the renewal of the Prussian Treaties was so great. that Lord Royston, writing to Lord Hardwicke, said, "The House was hot and crowded .-- as full of ladies as the House of Lords when the king goes to make a speech The members were standing above half way up the floor" It became necessary on this occasion, to enforce the standing order for the exclusion of strangers 1 And in this way, for several years the presence of strangers, with rare exceptions, was freely admitted. But the same Parhament which had persecuted Wilkes, was destined to bring to an issue other great questions, affecting the relations of Parhament to the people It is not surprising that the worst of Parliaments should have been the most resolute in enforcing the rule for excluding strangers 1 It was at war with the pubhe liberties, and its evil deeds were best performed in secret The exclusion of strangers was generally more strict than had been customary, and whenever a popular member of Opposition endeavoured to make himself heard by the people, the ready expedient was adopted of closing the doors Burke, describing the position of an Opposition member at this period, wrote, "In the House he votes for ever in a dispirited minority; if he speaks, the doors are locked "2 Could any abuse of privilege be more monstrous than this? Was any misrepresentation of reporters, half so mischievous?

Rockingham Mem. 1 71

Tord Chatham's repeated motions impigning the proceedings of the Commons upon the Middlescx election, were naturally distasteful to immisters, and to the majority of the House of Lords; who, being unable to repress his impetuous eloquence, determined that, at least, it should not be heard beyond their walls. Accordingly on the 14th May, 1770, on his motion for a dissolution of Pahament, the Lords ordered the exclusion of all but members of the House of Commons, and much to be regretted that the publection of his valuable work has never been completed. They consist of loty-nine small 4to volumes, amongst the Egenton MSS at the British Museum, of which less than half were edited by M. Wright, and published in two volumes 2 Present Discontents, Works, in the sons of peers, and no reports of the debate reached the public.

&lt;sup>1</sup> The Pailment, assembled May 10th, 1768, and divesdred June 122nd, 1774, was commonly called the unreported Pailment, in consequence of the starte enforcement of the standing orde for the evelsion of stangens Prof to Cavenduck's Deb Si Hemy Cavendiss and has supplied a great hattes in the debates of the periord, and its soil

In the next session, the same tactics were resumed road On the 10th December, the Duke of Manchester rose, to desires the make a motion relative to preparations for the war with House to Spain, then believed to be impending, when he was interrupted by Lord Gower, who desired that the House might be cleared. He urged as reasons for excluding strangers, that the motion had been brought on without notice, that matters mucht be stated which ought not to be divulged, that, from the crowded state of the House, emissailes from Spain might be present, and lastly, that notes were taken of their debates. The Duke of Richmond attempted to arrest the execution of the order, but his voice was drowned in clamour Lord Chatham rose to order, but failed to obtain a hearing The Lord Chancellor attempted to address the House and restore order, but even his voice could not be heard Lord Chatham, and eighteen other peers,-indignant at the disorderly uproar, by which every effort to address the House had been put down,-withdrew from then places The messengers were already proceeding to clear the House, when several members of the House Members of Commons, who had been waiting at the bar to bring of the Commons up a bill, desired to stay for that purpose, but were accounted from the turned out with the crowd, several peers having gone Loids down to the bar, to hasten their withdrawal They were presently called in again, but the moment they had delivered then message,—and before time had been allowed them to withdraw from the bar .-- an outcry arose, and they were literally hooted out of the

House 1

Parl Hist, xvi. 1318—1320, Walpole's Mem, iv. 217, Chatham Concesp , 1v 51,

Funous at this indecent treatment, the members hastened back to then own House. The first result of their anger was sufficiently indiculous. Mr. George Onslow desired the House to be cleared, "peers and all." The only peers below the bar were the very lords who had in van resisted the exclusion of strangers from their own House, which they had just left in indignation, and now the resentment of the Commons, — provided by others—was first expended upon them.

In debate, the msult to the Commons was warmly resented Various motions were made — for inspecting the Lords' journals, for demanding a conference upon the subject, for sending messages by the eldest sons of peers and masters in Chancery, who alone, it was said, would not be insulted, and for restraining members from going to the Lords without leave. But none of them were accepted. The only retaliation that could be agreed upon, was the exclusion of peers, which involved a consequence by no means desired,—the continued exclusion of the public.

In the Lords, sixteen peers agned a strong protest against the notons proceedings of their House, and deprecating the exclusion of strungers. An order, however, was made that none but persons having a right to be present, should be admitted during the sitting of the House, and instructions were given to the officers, that members of the House of Commons should not be allowed to come to the bar, except when announced as bringing messages, and should then immediately withdraw. To this rule the Lords continued strictly to adhere for the remainder of the session, and none of their debates were reported, unless notes were communicated by the peers themselves The Commons were less tenacious, or their officers less strict, and strangers gradually crept back to the gallery Lord Chatham happily expressed his contempt for a senate debating with closed doors Writing to Colonel Barié on the 22nd January, 1771, he says, "I take it for granted that the same declaration will be laid before the tapestry on Friday, which will be offered to the live figures in St Stephen's,"1 and again on the 25th he writes to Lady Chatham, "Just returned from the tancstry "2 The mutual exclusion of the members of the two Houses, continued to be enforced, in a spirit of vindictive ictaliation, for several veaus 8

&lt;sup>1</sup> Dec 10th and 13th, 1770, Parl 149, 160; Walpole's Mem, 1v 228 Hist, vvi. 1322, Cavendish Deb, 11 <sup>2</sup> Parl, Hist, xvi. 1310—1321

In the Commons, however, this system of exclusion Contest took a new turn, and, having commenced in a quarrel with the with the Peers, it ended in a collision with the mess 1771 Colonel George Onslow complained of the debates which still appeared in the newspapers, and insinuating that they must have been supplied by members themselves, insisted upon testing this view, by excluding all but members 4 The reports continued, and now he fell upon the piliters

But before this new contest is entered upon, it will Publication be necessary to review the position which the piess oc- of debates cupied at this time, in its relation to the debates of Paihament The prohibition to print and publish the debates, naturally dates from a later period than the exclusion of strangers It was not until the press had made great advances, that such a privilege was declared. Parlament, in order to protect its freedom of speech. had guarded its proceedings by a strong fence of pii-

Chatham College, 1v 73 Burke's Speeches, 1 250 2 Ibid , 86 4 Feb 7th, 1771, Pail Hist, Debate in the Commons, Dec xvi 1355, n, Cavendish Deb, 1., 12th, 1774, Parl Hist, xviii 52, 244

vilege, but the printing of its debates was an event beyond its prevision

In 1641, the Long Parliament permitted the publication of its proceedings, which appeared under the title of "Diurnal Occurrences in Parliament" The minting of speeches, however, without leave of the House, was, for the first time, prohibited 1 In particular cases, indeed, where a speech was acceptable to the Parliament, it was ordered to be printed, but if any speech was published obnoxious to the dominant party, the vengeance of the House was speedily provoked Sir E Deing was expelled and imprisoned in the Tower, for punting a collection of his speeches; and the book was ordered to be burned by the common hangman 2

The prohibition to print debates was continued after the Restoration, but, in order to prevent maccurate accounts of the business transacted, the House of Commons, in 1680, directed its "votes and proceedings," without any reference to debates, to be printed under the direction of the Speaker 8 Debates were also frequently published, notwithstanding the prohibition When it served the purpose of men like Lord Shaftesbury, that any debate should be circulated, it made its appearance in the form of a letter or pamphlet 4 Andrew Marvell reported the proceedings of the Commons, to his constatuents at Hull, from 1660 to 16785, and Grey, for thuty years member for Derby, took notes of the Commons, 1675"

by Locke "Letter from a Parlia-

<sup>1</sup> July 13th and 22nd, Com Journ , n 209, 220 Feb 2nd, 1641, Com Jouin, ni 411

S Ibid, 1x 74, Grey's Deb, vin

<sup>4 &</sup>quot;Letter from a Person of Quality to a Friend in the Country," 1675.

ment-man to his Friend, concerning the Proceedings of the House of 5 Letters to the Corporation of Hull, Marvell's Works, 1 1-400

debates from 1667 to 1694, which are a valuable contribution to the history of that time 1

After the Revolution, Parliament was more realous than ever of the publication of its proceedings, or of any allusion to its debates By frequent resolutions2, and by the punishment of offenders, both Houses endeavoured to restrain "news-letter writers" from "intermeddling with their debates or other proceedings," or " giving any account or minute of the debates" But privilege could not prevail against the press, nor against the taste for political news, which is natural to a free country

Towards the close of the reign of Anne, regular but imperfect accounts of all the principal debates, were published by Boyer 8 From that time, reports continued to appear in Boyer's "Political State of Great Biitain," the "London Magazine," and the "Gentleman's Magazine," the authors of which were frequently assisted with notes from members of Parliament the latter, Doctor Johnson wrote the Parhamentary reports, from the 19th of Nov., 1740, tall the 23rd of Feb. 1743, from the notes of Cave and his assistants The names of the speakers, however, were omitted 4 Until 1738, it had been the practice to give their initials only, and, in order to escape the censure of Parliament, to withhold the publication of the debates, until after the session In that year, the Commons prohibited the publication of debates, or proceedings, "as well during the recess, as the sitting of Parliament," and resolved to "proceed with the utmost severity against offenders" 5 After this period, the reporters.

&lt;sup>1</sup> They were published in ten Britain, was commenced in 1711 volumes 8yo 1769 <sup>4</sup> Prefaces to Cobbett's Pa 4 Prefaces to Cobbett's Parl

being in fear of parliamentary privilege, were still more careful in their disguises. In the "Gentleman's Magazine," the debates were assigned to the "Schatc of Great Lilliput," and in the "London Magazine" to the Political Club, where the speeches were attributed to Mark Anthony, Brutus, and other Roman worthics This caution was not superfluous, for both Houses were quick to punish the publication of their proceedings, in any form, and printers and publishers became familiar with the Black Rod, the Serjeant-at-Arms, and Newgate 1 At length, in 1771, at the instigation of Wilkes 2, notes of the speeches, with the names of the speakers, were published in several journals 8 These papers had rarely attempted to give a correct and impartial account of the debates; but had misreprescuted them to sut the views of different parties Dr Johnson is said to have confessed that "he took care that the Whie dogs should not have the best of it," and, in the same spirit, the arguments of all parties were in turn perverted or suppressed Galling as was this practice, it had been less offensive while the names of the speakers were withheld, but when these were added, members were personally affronted by the misconstruction of their opinions and arguments, and by the ludicious form in which they were often presented The chief complaints against reporting had arisen from the misrepresentations, to which it was made subservient In the debate upon this subject in 1738, nearly all the

Musierresentations , ofreporters

Oxlade, Randall, Egglesham, Owen, and Knight, are amongst the names of publishers committed or censured for publishing debates or piecedings in Palhament Such was the extravagine with which the Loids

* Walpole's Mem, 1v 278

* The London Evening Post, the extravagine with which the Loids

* James Chonnele, the Gazettes, enforced their privilege, that in and others

<sup>1</sup> Woodfall, Baldwin, Jay, Millan, 1729, a part of their Journal having been printed in Rymer's Fredera, they oldered it to be taken out and destroyed -Lords' Jone n , xx111 422

speakers, including Sir W Wyndham, Sir W Yonge, and Mr Winnington, agreed in these complaints, and rested their objections to reporting, on that ground The case was well and humorously stated, by Sir R Walpole "I have read some debates of this House, in which I have been made to speak the very reverse of what I meant I have read others, wherem all the wit, the learning, and the argument has been thrown into one side, and on the other, nothing but what was low, mean, and indiculous, and yet, when it comes to the question, the division has gone against the side which. upon the face of the debate, had reason and justice to support it So that, had I been a stranger to the proceedings, and to the nature of the arguments themselves, I must have thought this to have been one of the most contemptible assembles on the face of the earth" In this debate, Mr Pulteney was the only speaker who distinctly objected to the publication of the speeches of members, on the ground "that it looks very like making them accountable without doors, for what they say within "1

Indeed, it is probable that the early jealousies of offensive Parliament would soon have been overcome, if the reporting reports had been impartial. The development of the liberty of the press was checked by its own excesses, and the publication of debates was retaided by the unfairness of reporters Nor were the complaints of members confined to mere misrepresentation. The reports were frequently given in the form of narratives, in which the speakers were distinguished by nicknames, and described in opprobrious terms Thus, Colonel George Onslow was called "httle cocking George."2

&lt;sup>1</sup> Paul Hist, x 300 <sup>2</sup> Cavendish Deb. ii 257 VOL. I EE

"the little secondiel," and "that little paltry, insignificant insect" The Colonel and his cousin were also spoken of in scurrilous comments, as being like "the constellations of the two beaus in the heavens, one being called the great, and the other the little scoundrel." 3

To report the debates in such a spirit, was at once to violate the orders of the House, and to publish libellous insults upon its members. Parhament had erred in persisting in the prohibition of reporting, long after its occasion had passed away, and the reporters had sacrificed a great public privilege, to the base uses of a scurrilous press The events of the first ten years of this reign, had increased the violence of public writers, and embittered the temper of the people The "North Briton" and "Junius," had assailed the highest personages, and the most august assemblies, with unexampled heense and audacity Wilkes had defied the House of Commons, and the ministers The city had bearded the king upon his throne Yet this was the time chosen by an unpopular House of Commons, to insist too rigorously upon its privileges, and to seek a contest with the press

Complaints against Thompson and and A Wheble,

On the 8th February, 1771, Colonel George Onslow made a complant of "The Gazetteer and New Daily Advertser," punted for R. Thompson, and of the "Middlesex Journal," printed by R. Wheble, "as misrepresenting the speeches, and reflecting on several of the members of this House." The printers were ordered to attend,—but not without serious warnings and remonstances from those who foresaw the entanglements, into which the House was likely to be drawn. They kept out of the way, and were ordered to be taken into custody. The Seigeant proceeded to execute the order, and was laughed at by their servants 1 Thus thwarted, the House addressed the king to issue a proclamation, offering a reward for their apprehension

&lt;sup>1</sup> Cavendish Deb , 11 258 <sup>2</sup> Ibid , 377, n

&lt;sup>a</sup> Ibid, 379 <sup>a</sup> Ibid, 257

Meanwhile, the offences for which the House was Complaints pursuing Thompson and Wheble, were practised by edited several other printers, and on the 12th March. Plinters Colonel Onslow made a complaint against the printers of six other newspapers The House had not yet succeeded in apprehending the first offenders, and now another host was arranged before them. In some of these papers, the old discusses were retained. In the "St James's Chronicle" the speeches were entitled "Debates of the representatives of Utopia," Mr Dyson was described as "Jeremiah Weymouth, Esq. the d-n of this country," and Mr Constantine Phipps as "Mr Constantine Lincoln" None of the errors of Parhament have been committed, without the warnings and protests of some of its enlightened members, and this further onslaught upon the printers was vigorously resisted The minority availed themselves of motions for adjournment, amendments, and other parliamentary forms, well adapted for delay, until past four in the morning During this discussion there were no less than twenty-three divisions.—an unprecedented number 4 Burke afterwards said of these proceedings "Posterity will bless the pertinaciousness of that day."5

All the six printers were ordered to attend at the bar, and on the day appointed, four of the number appeared, and a fifth, Mr Woodfall, being aheady in and the other Lancoln 4 Cavendish Deb , 11 377

&lt;sup>1</sup> Cavendish Deb. u 324

<sup>2</sup> Ibid . 383 One represented Weymouth, 5 Ibid. 395

the custody of the Black Rod, by order of the Lords, was prevented from attending Two of them, Baldwin and Wright, were reprimanded on their knees and discharged, and Bladon, having made a very humble submission, was discharged without a reprimand Evans, who had also attended the order of the House, went home before he was called in, in consequence, it was said, of an accident to his wrife He was ordered to attend on another day, but wrote a letter to the Speaker, in which he questioned the authority of the House, and declined to obey its order Lastly, Miller did not attend, and was ordered into custody for his offence.

Wheble taken before Alderman Wilkes

On the 14th March, Wheble, who was still at large, addressed a letter to the Speaker, inclosing the opinion of counsel on his case, and declaring his determination "to yield no obedience but to the laws of the land" The next day, he was collusively apprehended by Carpenter, a printer, by virtue of the proclamation, and taken before Alderman Wilkes! This dexterous and cunning agitator had encouraged the printers to resist the authority of the House, and had concerted measures tor defying its jurisdiction, and insulting its officers. He unmediately discharged the prisoner, and bound him over to prosecute Carpenter, for an assault and false immisonment He further wrote a letter to Lord Halifax. the Secretary of State, acquainting him that Wheble had been apprehended by a person who " was neither a constable not peace-officer of the city," and for no legal offence, but merely in consequence of the proclamation. -"in direct violation of the rights of an Englishman, and of the chartered privileges of a citizen of this metropolis,"-and that he had discharged him 2

Parl Hist, xvn 90, n, Com Parl Hist., xvn 95. Journ, xxxn, 250—259.

On the same day, Thompson was apprehended by And another printer, and carried before Alderman Oliver at hefun the Mansion House, but "not being accused of having Alderman Oliver committed any crime," was discharged. In both cases. the captors applied for a certificate that they had apprehended the prisoners, in order to obtain the rewards offered by the proclamation, but the collusion was too obvious, and the Treasury refused to pay them

On the following day, a graver business arose, Commit-Hitherto the legality of apprehending persons under ment of the the proclamation, had alone been questioned, but now the authority of the House was directly contemned. In obedience to the Speaker's warrant for taking Miller into custody. Whittam, a messenger of the House, succeeded in apprehending him, in his shop. But Miller, instead of submitting, sent for a constable,—accused the messenger of having assaulted him in his own house. and gave him into custody They were both taken to the Mansion House, and appeared before the Lord Mayor, Mr Alderman Oliver, and Mr Alderman Wilkes. Miller charged the messenger with an assault and false imprisonment. The messenger justified himself by the production of the Speaker's warrant, and the Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms claimed both the messenger and his pusoner But the Lord Mayor inquired if the messenger was a peace-officer or constable, and if the warrant was backed by a city magistrate, and being answered in the negative, discharged Miller out of custody The charge of the latter against the messenger was then proved, and Whittam, by direction of the Sergeant, having declined to give bail, was committed under a warrant, siened by the three magistrates After his commitment, he was admitted to bail on his own application

The artful continuances of Wilkes were completely successful The contumacious printers were still at large, and he had brought the city into open conflict with the House of Commons The House was in a ferment Many members who had resisted the prosecution of the printers, admitted that the privileges of the House had now been violated; but they were anxious to avert any further collision between the House,-already too much discredited by recent proceedings,-and the popular magistracy of the city The Lord Mayor, Mr Brass Crosby, being a member of the House, was first ordered to attend in his place, on the following day1, and afterwards M1. Oliver, also a member, was ordered to attend in his place, and Mr Wilkes at the bar, on other days.

The Lord Mayor (Brass Crosby) sttends the House

At the appointed time, the Lord Mayor, though he had been confined for several days by the gout, obeyed the order of the House His carriage was escorted by a produgious crowd,-whose attendance had been invited by a handbill, and he was received with such acclamations in the lobby, that the Speaker desired it to be cleared of strangers 2 The Lord Mayor, -who was so ill as to be obliged to speak sitting,-justified himself by his oath of office, which bound him to protect the citizens in their rights and franchises He stated that by the charters of the city, confirmed by Act of Parliament, no warrant, process, or attachment could be executed within the city but by its own magistrates, and that he should have been guilty of perjury, if he had not discharged the prisoner He then desired to be heard by counsel, in support of the jurisdiction of the city The Speaker intimated that the House could not hear counsel against its privileges, and while this matter was under discussion, the Lord Mayor, being too ill to remain in the House, was allowed to go home It was at length decided to hear counsel on such points as did not controvert the privileges of the House1, and the same right was afterwards conceded to Alderman Oliver 2 The scene was enlivened by Mr Wilkes, who having been ordered to attend at the bar, wrote to the Speaker, with his usual effrontery, claiming to attend in his place, as member for Middlesex 9

March 19th, Parl Hist, xvn <sup>2</sup> Cavendish Deb., n. 422 98, Cavendish Deb., n. 400.

So far the House had stood upon its unassailable Record of privilege of commitment, but now it proceeded to a number of violation of the law, at once arbitrary and ridiculous clased. The clerk to the Lord Mayor had been ordered to attend with the book containing the recognizance of Whittam the messenger, and on its production by that officer, he was ordered to expunge the entry at the table, which he accordingly did 4 While this scene was being enacted, most of the Opposition members left the House, in order to mark their reprobation of an act, by which a record was effaced, - over which the House had no authority, - and the course of justice violently stayed 5 According to Lord Chatham, it was the "act of a mob, and not of a Parhament" 6

The House then ordered that no prosecution should Messenger be commenced against the messenger, for his pretended prosecuassault He was nevertheless indicted; and a true bill tion being found against hun, he was only saved by the Attorney-General, who entered a nolle prosequi

Some delay ensued in the proceedings, in consequence

1 Cavendish Deb , n 436 Hist, vvn 117, Com Joun, xxxii 275 <sup>2</sup> Ibid, 442, Parl Hist, xvii <sup>5</sup> Ann Reg , 1771, p 66, Wal-pole's Mem , iv 204 8 Paul Hist, xvii 113, n May 1st, 1771, Parl. Hist, xvii 221 * Cavendish Deb , 11, 488 , Paul

The Lord Mayor and Alderman Ohver heard in their places of the continued indisposition of the Lord Mayor, but on the 25th March, he and Mr Alderman Ohver attended in their places. They were accompanied to the House by immense crowds, who cheered them on their way. Before their case was proceeded with, the order for the attendance on that day of Alderman Wilkes,—the prime mover of all this mischnef,—was dischanged, the court and the ministers being fairly afraid of another contest with so dangerous an antagomst. The Lord Mayor now declined being heard by counsel, and after the reading of the city charters, and oatis of office, he briefly uiged that he had acted in obedience to the laws and constitution, and appealed to the justice of the House. An endeavour was made to evade any further proceedings, by the previous question, but after an exciting debate,—interrupted by the shouts and uproar of the crowd, by which the House was surrounded!——is solutions were agreed to, declaring that the privileges of the House had been violated? The Loid Mayor

Alderman Ohver committed to the Tower had been allowed to go home early in the evening, when the crowd took the hoises from his carriage, and bore him triumphantly to the Maiston House. Alderman Ohver being still in the House, was now called upon for his defence. In a few words he said that he gloried in what he had done, that he was unconceined at the punishment intended for him, and which nothing he could say would avert, "and as he expected little from their justice, he defied their power." 8 Motions were immediately made that he had been guilty of a breach of privilege, and should be committed to the Tower, and after a debate, portracted,—by earnest protests and remonstrances against this proceeding,—till half-past-

Paul Hist, xvii 125, Cavendish Deb. n 452, 454

<sup>2</sup> Cavendish Deb , n. 461,

<sup>3</sup> Parl Hist, xvii 125

three in the morning, an order for his commitment was agreed to  $^{\rm 1}$

At the next sitting of the House, the Lord Mayor The Lord attended in his place Again he was accompanied by a Mayor committed crowd, larger and more tumultuous than before members with difficulty made their way through Palace Yard and Westmuster Hall Lord North's carriage was broken to pieces, and he himself escaped, - not without mury,-with the assistance of Sir W Meredith Mr Charles Fox,-a violent champion of privilege,and his brother Stephen, had their carriages injured , and several members were insulted and pelted with stones and mud For some time, the House was unable to proceed to business. The magistrates tried in vain to disperse or tranquillise the mob, but the Sheriffs, -who both happened to be members, -being sent by the Speaker, at length succeeded in restoring order In consideration of the Lord Mayor's state of health, it was at first proposed merely to commit him to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, but as he boldly declined to accept this favour from the House, and desired to bear his friend Ohver company, he was committed to the Tower 2 Meanwhile Wilkes, the chief offender, was still at large. He had been again ordered to attend on the 8th April, but ministers discreetly moved the adjournment for the Easter Holidays until the 9th, and thus the dreaded culprit was eluded. This subterfuge may have been prudent · but it was not magnanimous

The authority of the House of Commons had clearly ovation of the been defied, and however ill-advised the proceedings the proceedings.

which had led to the contest with the city magis
1 He was allowed to sleep at his to the Tower (Gontleman's Mag.,

 $^1$  He was allowed to sleep at his to the Tower (Gentleman's Mag , house that night, and early the cited in Pail Ilist , xvii 155, n ) at met morning the Seigeaut took him  $^2$  Mauch 27th , Pail Hist , xvii 157.

trates, the House could scarcely have flinched from the vindication of its privileges 1 But Parliament has no means of punishing a popular offender. The Lord Mayor, on leaving the House, accompanied by the Sergeant-at-Arms, was surrounded by the crowd. who took the horses from his carriage, and bore him to Temple Bar Here they shut the city gates, and would have rescued him from custody, but for the adroitness of the Lord Mayor, who assured them he was going home, accompanied by his friends slept that meht at the Mansion House, and early the following morning reached the Tower, without observation. Here the prisoners received every mark of public attention and sympathy. Visited by the most distinguished leaders of the Opposition. - attended by deputations, - flattered in addresses, complimented by the freedom of many cities, - and overloaded with presents,-their imprisonment, instead of being a punishment, was a long-continued ovation. They failed to obtain then iclease under writs of habeas corpus, as the legality of their commitment could not be impeached, but on the 8th May, after six weeks' confinement, the prorogation of Parliament set them at liberty Attended by a triumphal pro-

the parties to this contest "Nothing appears to me more distinct than declaring their right to junisdiction, with regard to printers of their pioceedings, and debates, and punishing then momber, and in him his constituents, for what he has done in discharge of his oath and conscience as a magistrate" Lord Chatham to Colonel Barré, March 26th, 1771 - Chatham Cor-1 esp , 1v 186

Temple, April 17th, 1771, said, See also Junius, Letter xliv

&lt;sup>2</sup> Lord Chatham condemned all "Great is the absurdity of the city in putting the quariel on the evercase of the most tenable privilege the House is possessed of, a night to summon before them punters punting then debates during the session Incomparable is the wrongheadedness and folly of the Court, ignorant how to be twenty-four hours on good ground, for they have most ingeniously contrived to be guilty of the nankest tyranny. ep, w 136 m every step taken to assent the Lord Chatham, writing to Earl right" — Grenville Papers, w 583

cession, they proceeded from the Tower to the Mansion House; and the people exulted at the liberation of their popular magistrates 1

Thus ended this painful and embarrassing conflict Reporting Its results were decisive. The publication of debates permitted was still asserted to be a breach of privilege, but the offence was committed with impunity Another contest with the press, supported by a powerful opposition and nopular sympathies, was out of the question: and henceforth the proceedings of both Houses were ficely reported Parhament as well as the public has since profited by every facility which has been afforded to reporting The suppression of the names of the speakers, and the adoption of fictitious designations, had encouraged reporters to introduce other fictions into their narratives, and to impute aiguments and language, which had never been used, to characters of then own creation

But reporters were still beset with too many diffi- Its difficulties, to be able to collect accurate accounts of the culties debates Prohibited from taking notes, they were obliged to write mainly from memory If notes were taken at all, they were written surreptitiously, and in fear of the Sergeant-at-Arms Nor was this the only impediment to reporting. The accommodation for strangers was very limited, and as no places were reserved for reporters, they were obliged to wait upon the stans, --- sometimes for hours, --- before the doors were opened, in order to secure admission such restraints, imperfections in the reports were to be expected However faithfully the substance of the debates may have been rendered, it is not conceivable that the language of the speakers could have been preserved, and it was probably no vain boast of Dr Johnson, when, to a company lost in admiration at one of M1 Pitt's most eloquent speeches, he exclaimed. "That speech I wrote in a garret, in Exeter Street"

<sup>1</sup> Memous of Biass Ciosby, 1820, Reg, 1771, 59 et seq, Adolphus, Almon's Life of Wilkes, Ann Hist, chap xix

Nor were any further facilities conceded to reporters. after the struggle of 1771 Lord Malmesbury, speaking of Mr. Pitt's speech, 23rd May, 1803, on the renewal of hostilities with France, said "By a new airangement of the Speaker's, strangers were excluded till so late an hour, that the newspaper printers could not get in, and of course, no part of Pitt's speech can be printed "2 sketch of this speech, however, has been preserved. but the whole debate was very imperfectly reported 8 Even so late as 1807, it was noticed in the House of Lords, that a person was taking notes in the gallery 4 Another interruption to which reporting was still exposed, was the frequent and capricious exclusion of strangers, at the desire of a single member On the 29th January, 1778, seven years after the contest with the printers, Colonel Luttrell complained of misrepresentation in a newspaper, and said he should move the exclusion of strangers, in order to prevent the recurrence of such a practice, upon which Mr Fox made this remarkable observation: "He was convinced the true and only method of preventing misrepresentation was by throwing open the gallery, and making the debates and decisions of the House as public as possible. There was less danger of misrepresentation son The editor of Cobbett's Perliamentary History bears testimony to the general accuracy of Dr Johnson's reports, and disacedits the statements of Sir John Hawkins and III, rv 150, not mentioned in the others, who had regarded them as Pail Debates

<sup>2</sup> Su J Hawkons' Lafe of Dr John- the works of his own imagination

-Prefs to vols x1 and x1.

2 Corresp and Diary, 1v 262

3 Parl Hist, xxxv1 1386

in a full company than a thin one, as there would be a menter number of persons to give evidence against the misremesentation "1

On the 14th June, 1798, the debate on Mr Sheridan's motion for a committee on the state of Ireland, was lost to the public, by the exclusion of strangers 2 In 1810. Mr. Yorke enforced the exclusion of strangers during the inquiries, at the bar, into the expedition to the Scheldt, when Mr Sheridan vainly attempted to obtain a modification of the rule, which vested in a single member, the power of excluding the public.8 And on some later occasions, the reports of the debates in both Houses have been interrupted from the same cause 4

But when the fear of punishment was abated, the reports became more systematic, and were unproved in character and conjousness. There were still delays, and other shortcomings but mainly by the enterprise and ability of Almon, Woodfall, and Peiry, the system of reporting and printing the debates gradually attained its present marvellous rapidity and completeness And what a revolution has it accomplished!

The entire people are now present, as it were, and Political assist in the deliberations of Parliament An orator results of

Paul Hist, xix 647 A few casion unhappily led to the withdrawal of the privilege, which they had long enjoyed, of being present at the debates of the House of

> Feb 2nd, 1778 London Chronicle, cited in note to Parl Hist. vol xix p 678 Hatsell, Piec, ii 181, n See also Giey's Deb, iii 222 Pail Hist xix 674, n.

2 Paul Hist, xxxm 1487. 3 Hansaid's Deb, xv S25

4 Even so late as 1849 the doors of the House of Commons were closed against strangers for nearly two homs, and no report of the days afterwards strangers, were ordered to withdraw This order was enforced against the gentle- at the de men, but the ladies, who were pre- Commons sent in unusual numbers, were per-mitted to remain Governoi Johnstone, however, remonstrated upon the indulgence shown to them, and they were also directed to withdraw But they showed no disposition to obey this ungracious order, and business was interrupted for nearly two homs, before then exclusion was accomplished Among the number were the Duchess of Devonshue, and Lady Norton The debate during that time was pubcontumacy of the ladies on this oc- lished addresses not only the assembly of which he is a member, but, through them, the civilised world Publicity has become one of the most important instruments of parhamentary government The people are taken into counsel by Parliament, and concur in approving or condemning the laws, which are there proposed, and thus the doctrine of Hooker is verified to the very letter "Laws they are not, which public approbation hath not made so " While publicity secures the ready acceptance of good laws by the people, the passing of bad laws, of which the people disapprove, is beyond the power of any minister Long before a measure can be adopted by the legislature, it has been approved or condemned by the public voice; and hving and acting in public, Parhament, under a free representation, has become as sensitive to public opinion, as a barometer to atmospheric pressure. Such being the direct influence of the people over the deliberations of Parliament, they must share, with that body, the responsibility of legislation They have permitted laws to be passed. -they have accepted and approved them; and they will not afterwards allow them to be disturbed. Hence the remarkable permanence of every legislative settlement. There has been no retrogression in our laws or policy The people,-if slow to perceive the value of new pimciples,-hold fast to them when once acknowledged, as to a national faith 1 No circumstance in the history of our country, - not even parliamentary reform, - has done more for freedom and good government, than the unfettered liberty of reporting And of all the services which the press has rendered to free institutions, none has been greater than its bold defiance of parliamentary privilege, while labouring for the interests of the people.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Though equal publicity pre-vals in the United States, then ed.) See also an interesting essay greatism is more sudden and more of Sismondi, "De in Deliberation pulsary, and remarkable, therefore, Notionals of Bellets so les Consti-tor its matchist)—De Troquerelli, tationa de Physics Live, Son.

Reporting, instead of being resented by Parliament, Reporting is now encounaged as one of the main sources of its breach of influence, while the people justly esteem it, as the privilege surest safeguard of liberty Yet such is the tenacity with which ancient customs are observed,-long after their uses have ceased to be recognised, -that the privilege itself has never been relinquished. Its maintenance, however, is little more than a harmless anomaly Though it is still a breach of privilege to publish the debates, parhamentary censure is reserved for wilful misi con esentation, and even this offence is now scarcely known The extraordinary ability, candour, and good faith of the modern school of reporters, have left nothing for Parliament or the public to desire

The fire which destroyed both Houses of Parliament Galleries in 1834, introduced a new era in reporting Though accommofor many years past, the reporters of the daily press had drien of enjoyed facilities unknown to their predecessors, they still carried on their difficult labours, in the strangers' gallery In the temporary Houses, separate galleries, for the accommodation of reporters, were first introduced; and this significant change has been perpetuated in the present buildings

In 1845 the presence of strangers in the galleries Presence, and other parts of the House, not appropriated to mem- ofstrangers bers, was for the first time recognised by the orders of the House of Commons, yet this tardy recognition of their presence, did not supersede the ancient rule by which they could be excluded on the word of a single member

Publication of division lists

A further change was still wanting to complete the publicity of parliamentary proceedings, and the responsibility of members The conduct of members who took part in the debates, —until recently a very small number, -was now known, but the conduct of the great majority who were silent, was still a secret Who were present, how they voted, -and what members composed the majority, and therefore the ruling body, could not be ascertained On questions of unusual interest, it was customary for the minority to secure the publication of their own names, but it was on very raie occasions indeed, that a list of the majority could also be obtained 1 In either case the publication was due to the exertions of individual members The House itself took no cognisance of names, but concerned itself merely with the numbers The grave constitutional objections to this form of voting, had not escaped the notice of parliamentary reformers Lord John Russell, in his speech on parhamentary reform in 1819, said -"We are often told that the publication of the debates is a corrective for any defect in the composition of this House But to these men, such an argument can by no means apply, the only part they take in the affairs of this House, is to vote in the majority; and it is well known that the names of the majority are scarcely ever published. Such members are unlimited kings,-bound by no rule in the exercise of their power,-fearing nothing from public censure, in the pursuit of selfish objects, -not even influenced by the love of praise and historical fame, which affects the most despotae sovereigns, but making laws,

In 1696, the Commons declared Journ, x1 572 In 1782, the Oppo-In 1702, the Common recentled 2012, 37 672 In 1702, the Opponent be purtue the names of the minority, a breach of purulege, as ministerial members appearing in the control of Pailament?—Com black—Wrazall Mem, in 691

voting money, imposing taxes, sanctioning wais, with all the plenitude of power, and all the protection of obscurity, having nothing to deter them but the reproach of conscience, and everything to tempt the indulgence of avarice and ambition "1

It was not, however, until 1836,-four years after the passing of the reform act,-that the House of Commons adopted the wise and popular plan of recording the votes of every member, and publishing them, day by day, as part of the proceedings of the House. So stringent a test had never been applied to the conduct of members, and if free constituencies have since failed in their duty of sending able and conscientious representatives, the fault has been entirely their own.

The Commons have since extended the principle Strangers of publicity still further. The admission of strangers drisions to debates had been highly prized, but the necessity of excluding them during a division, had never been doubted 2 Yet in 1853 it was shown by Mr Muntz8 that they might be permitted to remain in the galleries. without any embarrassment to the tellers, and they have since looked down upon the busy scene, and shared in the excitement of the declaration of the numbers

In these important changes, the Commons have also divisions been followed by the Lords Since 1857, their Lord- Indo ships have published their division lists daily, and during a division, strangers are permitted to remain in the galleries and in the space within the rails of the throne 4

In a minor, yet not unimportant change, the personal Names of that their exclusion was necessary

VOI., T.

<sup>1</sup> Hansaid's Deb, 3id Sei, xh Report of Select Committee on Divisions, 1853 <sup>2</sup> In 1849 a committee reported Resolutions, March 10th, 1857

members on committees responsibility of members, as well to the House as to the public, has been extended. In the Commons, since 1839 the name of every member addressing questions to witnesses before select committees, has been published with the minutes of evidence, and in 1852 the same practice was adopted by the Lords. It displays the mitelligence, the knowledge, and the candour of the questioners, or their obtuseness, ignorance, and prejudice. It exhibits them seeking for tuith, or obstinately persisting in error. Their presence at each sitting of the committee, and their votes upon overy question, are also recorded and published in the minutes of proceedings.

Publication of parliamentary reports and papers.

One other concession to the principle of unrestricted publicity, must not be overlooked One of the results of increasing activity and vigilance in the Legislature, has been the collection of information, from all sources, on which to found its laws Financial and statistical accounts,-1eports and papers upon every question of foreign and domestic policy,-have been multiplied in so remarkable a manner, since the union with Ireland, that it excites surprise how Parliament affected to legislate. in earlier times, without such information. These documents were distributed to all members of the Legislature, and, by their favour, were also accessible to the public In 1835 the Commons took a further step in the encouragement of publicity, by directing all their papers to be ficely sold, at a cheap rate 1 The public have since had the same means of information, upon all legislative questions, as the House itself Community of knowledge, as well as community of discussion, has been established If comments are justly made upon the extravagance of parliamentary printing,-if voluminous Reports on Printed Papers, 1835.

"blue books" are too often a fair object of indicule, -vet the information they afford is for the public. and the extent and variety of the documents printed. - attest at once the activity of members, and the keen interest taken by the people, in the business of legislation

While the utmost publicity has thus been gradually Freedom of extended to all parhamentary proceedings, a greater comments upon Parfreedom has been permitted to the piess, in criticising hamen the conduct of Parliament Relying upon the candour of public opinion for a justification of its conduct, Parhament has been superior to the irritable sensitiveness, which formerly resented a free discussion of its proceedings Rarely has either House thought fit, of late years, to restrain by punishment, even the severest censures upon its own debates and proceedings When gross hbels have been published upon the House itself, or any of its members, the House has occasionally thought it necessary to vindicate its honour, by the commitment of the offenders to custody But it has rightly distinguished between libels upon character and motaves,-and comments, however severe, upon political conduct In 1810, Mn Gale Jones was committed to Newgate, for publishing an offensive placard announcing for discussion in a debating society the conduct of two members, Mr G Yorke and Mr Windham. Sir Francis Burdett was sent to the Tower, for publishing an address to his constituents, denouncing this act of the House, and denying its right of commitment. Twenty years later, both these offences would probably have been distegarded, or visited with censure only Again, m 1819, Mr Hobhouse was committed to Newgate for violent, if not seditious, language in a pamphlet A few years afterwards, such an offence, if noticed at all, would have been remtted to the Attorney-General, and the Court of Queen's Bench In 1838, Mr O'Connell, for a much grosser ible than any of these, was only reprimanded in his place, by the Speaker. The forbearance of both Houses has maintained their diguity, and commanded public respect. Nor has it been without other good results, for, however free the commentaries of newspapers,—they have rarely been disgraced by the vulgar scurributes which marked the age of Wilkes and Junius, when Parliament was still wielding the rod of privilege over the press Universal freedom of discussion has become the law of our political system, and the familiar use of the puvilege, has gradually corrected its abuses

p p 2

The relations of Parliament with the people have also been drawn closer, by the extended use of the popular right of petitioning for redress of grievances Though this right has existed from the earliest times, it had been, mactically, restricted for many centuries, to petations for the rediess of personal and local grievances . and the remedies sought by petitioners, were such as Courts of Equity, and private Acts of Parliament have since been accustomed to provide The civil war of Charles I encouraged a more active exercise of the right of petitioning Numerous petitions of a political character, and signed by large bodies of people, were addressed to the Long Parhament 1 Freedom of opinion, however, was little tolerated by that assembly The supporters of their cause, were thanked and encouraged. its incautious opponents, if they ventured to petition, were punished as delinquents 2 Still it was during this period of revolution, that the practice of addressing Parhament upon general political questions had its rise

 $<sup>^1</sup>$  Clarendon, Rebell (Oxford Ed ,  $^2$  Ibid , n. 221, 348 , Com Jouin , 1826), 1 367 , n. 166, 206, 207, 222 ,  $^{\rm v}$  354, 967, 363 , Rushworth Coll , v. 460 , vı 463 , 487

After the Restoration, petitions were again discouraged For long periods, indeed, during the reign of Charles II , the discontinuance of Parliaments effectually suppressed them, and the collecting of signatures to petitions and addresses to the king, or either House of Parliament, for alteration of matters established by law, in church or state, was restrained by Act of Parhament 1

Nor does the Revolution appear to have extended Raisly the free usc of petitions In the next ten years, political petitions in some numbers were presented, - chiefly from persons interested, - relative to the African Company. __the scarcity and depreciation of the comage. __ the duties on leather .- and the woollen trade, but very few of a general political character of ommon was not tolerated In 1690, a netition from the city of London, hinting at a repeal of the Test Act, so far as it affected Protestant Dissenters, could hardly obtam a reading 2; and in 1701, the Commons imprisoned five of the Kentish petitioners, until the end of the session, for praying that the loval addresses of the House, might be turned into bills of supply 8 During the reigns of Queen Anne, and the first two Georges, petitions continued to pray for special relief, but larely interposed in questions of general legislation Even the ten first turbulent years of George III's reign, failed to develope the agency of petitions, among other devices of agitation. So little indulgence did Parhament then show to petitions, that if they expressed opinions of which the majority disapproved, the right of the subject did not protect them from summary rejection In 1772, a most temperate petition, praying for relief from subscription to the Thirty-nine Articles, was rejected by the Commons, by a large majority 1

<sup>1 13</sup> Chas II c 5 Petitions 2 Pail, Hist, v 359 to the King for the assembling of 5 Someré Thacts, xi 242, Pail Parliament wase discountenanced in Hist, v 1265, that, App, vvi. 1679 by proclamation (Dec 12th) xvm.

Commencement of the modern system of petitioning

It was not until 1779, that an extensive organisation to promote measures of economical and parliamentary reform, called into activity a general system of petitioning, - commencing with the freeholders of Yorkshire, and extending to many of the most important counties and cities in the kingdom 2. This may be regarded as the origin of the modern system of petitioning, by which public measures, and matters of general policy, have been pressed upon the attention of Parhament Corresponding committees being established in various parts of the country, were associated for the purpose of effecting a common object, by means of petitions, to be followed by concerted motions made in Parliament An organisation which has since been so often used with success, was now first introduced mto our political system 8 But as yet the number of petitions was comparatively small, and bore little proportion to the vast accumulations of later times. Notwithstanding the elaborate system of association and correspondence established, there do not appear to have been more than forty petitions4; but many of these were very numerously signed The Yorkshire petition was subscribed by upwards of eight thousand free-

<sup>1</sup> By 217 to 71 <sup>2</sup> Adolphus, m 94, 113, Remembraneet, vol 1x , Wyvil's Political Papers, 1 1-296, Wiaxall's

those for the abolition of the slave trade in 1787, though a few were presented for reform about the end of the American Was, which would undoubtedly have been rejected with indignation at any earlier stage of our constitution." I have assigned the somewhat carlier period of 1779, as the ougm of the modern system

Paul Hist, xx1 839, Ann

Mem , 292 3 Mr Hallam, m a valuable note to his Constitutional History, vol ii p 434, to which I am much in-debted, says that "the great multiplication of petitions wholly uncon- of petitioning nected with particular interests cannot, I beheve, be traced higher than Reg , 1780, p 165

holders1, the Westminster petition, by five thousand electors 2 The meetings at which they were agreed to, awakened the public interest in questions of reform, to an extraordinary degree, which was still further increased by the debates in Parliament, on their pre-At the same time, Loid George Gordon and his fanatical associates were engaged in preparing petitions against the Roman Catholics To one of these, no less than one hundred and twenty thousand signatures were annexed 8 But not satisfied with the influence of petitions so numerously signed, the dangerous fanatac who had collected them, sought to intimidate Parliament by the personal attendance of the petitioners, and his ill-advised conduct resulted in riots, conflagrations, and bloodshed, which nearly cost their mischievous originator his head

In 1782, there were about fifty petitions praying for Its devereform in the representation of the Commons in Parlia-lopment ment, and also a considerable number in subsequent years The great movement for the abolition of the slave trade soon followed. The first petition against that infamous traffic, was presented from the Quakers in 17824; and was not supported by other petitions for some years But in the meantime, an extensive association had instructed the people in the enormities of the slave trade, and aroused the popular sympathies in favour of the African negro In 1787 and 1788, a greater number of petitions were presented for this benevolent object, than had ever been addressed to Parhament, upon any other political question There were upwards of a hundred petitions, numerously signed,

Speech of Sn George Savile, Parl. Hist, xx 1374
 Speech of Mr Fox, *bid, xx
 * Ann Reg, 1780, p 259
 * June 17th, 1782, Com Journ, xxxxx. 487, Adolphus, Hist, tv

and from influential places 1 Never yet had the direct influence of petitions upon the deliberations of Parhament, been so remarkably exemplified The question of the slave trade was immediately considered by the government, by the Privy Council, and by Parhament, and remedial measures were passed, which ultimately led to its prohibition This consummation was indeed postponed for several years, and was not accomplished without many struggles, but the influence of petitions. and of the organisation by which they were produced, was marked throughout the contest 2 The king and Mr. Pitt appear, from the first, to have regarded with disfavour this agritation for the abolition of the slave trade, by means of addresses and petitions, as being likely to establish a precedent for forcing the adoption of other measures, less unobjectionable 8

Notwithstanding this recognition of the constitutional right of addressing Parliament upon public questions, the growth of petitions was not yet materially advanced Throughout the reign of George III their numbers, upon the most interesting questions, were still reckoned by hundreds only 4 As yet, it was sought to express the sentiments of influential classes only, and a few select petitions from the principal counties and cities.drawn with great ability, and signed by leading men,characterised this period of the history of petitions Even in 1816 there were little more than four hundred

<sup>2</sup> Com Journ vlin 159 et seg . Adolphus Hist, iv 306 2 Mr. Fox, writing to Di Wakefield, April 28th, 1801, said, "With regard to the slave trade, I conceive the great numbers which have voted with us, sometimes amount-

s Malmesbury Corresp , n 430 4 In 1813, there were 200 in fayour of Roman Catholic claims, and about 700 for promulgating the Ohristian religion in India in 1814, about 150 on the corn laws, and nearly 1000 for the abolition of the mg to a majority, have been princi- slave trade in 1817 and 1818, uppally owing to petitions"—Me-monals of For, iv 429 wards of 500 petitions for reform in Pallament petitions against the continuance of the Property Tax. notwithstanding the strong public feeling against it

It was not until the latter part of the succeeding reign. Petitions that petitioning attained that development, by which it highers has since been distinguished From that period it has bodies been the custom to influence the judgment of Parliament. not so much by the weight and political consideration of the petitioners, as by their numbers Religious bodies, -especially of Dissenting communions, -had already contributed the greatest number of petitions, and they have since been foremost in availing themselves of the rights of petitioners In 1824 an agitation was commenced, mainly by means of petitions, for the abolition of slavery, and from that period until 1833, when the Emancipation Act was passed, little less than twenty thousand petitions were presented in 1833 alone, nearly seven thousand were laid before the House of Commons Upon many other subjects, petitions were now numbered by thousands, instead of hundreds 1827 and 1828, the repeal of the Corporation and Test Acts was urged by upwards of five thousand petitions. Between 1825 and 1829, there were above six thousand petitions in favour of the Roman Catholic claims, and nearly mine thousand against them Other questions affecting the Church and Dissenters,-the Maynooth grant, church rates, and the observance of the Sabbath, have since called them forth, in still greater numbers 1 for relief of Dissenters In 1887 there were about 10,000 petitions relating to church rates Between 1833 and 1837, 5,000 petitions were presented for the better observance of the Lord's Day In 1845, 10,253 petations, with 1,288,742 signatures, were presented against the grant Bill. In 1856, 4,999 petitions, with

<sup>1</sup> In 1834 there were upwards of to Maynooth College In 1850, 2,000 petitions in support of the 4,475 petitions, with 656,910 sig-of thinch Establishment, and 2,400 natures, were presented against for relief of Dissenters In 1837 Sunday labour in the Post-office In 1851, 4,144 petitions, with 1,016,657 signatures, were presented for aspelling sucroachments of the Church of Rome, and 2,151 petitions, with 948,081 signatures, against the Ecclesiastical Titles

On a single day, in 1860, nearly four thousand petations were presented, on the question of church rates <sup>1</sup>

Extraordinary mcrease of petitions, The people have also expressed their opinions upon all the great political measures of the last thirty years, by prodigious numbers of petitions<sup>2</sup>, and these petitions have been freely isecured, however distastical their opinions,—however strong their language Disrespect and menace have not been suffered, but the wise and toleiant spirit of the age, has recognised unbounded liberty of opinion Abuses of petitioning This general use of petitions had been originally developed by associations, and in its progress, active organisation has ever since been resorted to, for bringing its great influence to bear upon Parhament. Sometimes, indeed, the manner in which petitioning has been systematised, has discredited the right on which it is founded, and the questions it has sought to advance. Petitions in thousands, — using the same language, — inscribed in the same handwriting, and on the same description of paper, —and signed by fabulous numbers,—have marked the activity of agents, lather than the unanimity of petitioners; and, instead of being received as the expression of public opinion, have been reprobated as an abuse of a popular privileg. In some cases, the unscriptions are proposed to the same description of papers.

620,028 signatures, were presented against opening the British Museum on Sundays, and in 1860, these were 5,575 petitions, with 197,687 signatures, against the sholiton of clurch rates, and 5,528 petitions, with 610,877 signatures, in favour of then aboliton of them sholiton.

<sup>1</sup> March 28th, 1860.

In 1846 there were 1,058 perioding 1858, 47,669 I tations, with 145,855 signatures, 24,279 potations were receipt 1843 previous year except 1843 previous year except 1843

agnatures, in favour of speel II.
1588 there were 677 petations, with 2,018,096 metations, propage for mercal entire propage for mercal entire propage for mercal entire propage for mercal entire propage 1643, 84,000 petations were centred by the flowes of Commons, in the five yeas ending 1853, 64,008, and in the five yeas ending 1853, 64,008, and in the five yeas ending 1853, 64,008, and in the five yeas ending 1853, 64,008 run received, 1852, 18

to resort to forgery and other frauds, for the multiplication of signatures.1

While the number of petitions was thus increasing, Debates on then influence was further extended, by the discussions presenting to which their presentation gave rise The arguments restrained of the petitioners, were repeated and enforced in debate Whatever the business appointed for consideration, the claims of petitioners to a prior hearing, were paramount Again and again, were the same questions thus forced upon the attention of Parhament A popular question absorbed all others at was for ever under discussion. This free access of petitioners to the inner deliberations of Parliament, was a great privilege. It had long been enjoyed and appreciated, but when it was too often clanned, its continuance became incompatible with good government After the reform act, the debating of netations threatened to become the sole business of the House of Commons For a time, expedients were tried to obtain partial relief from this serious embarrassment. but at length, in 1839, the House was forced to take the bold but necessary step, of prohibiting all debate upon the presentation of petitions 2 The reformed Parliament could venture upon so startling an invasion of the right of petitioning, and its fearless decision was not misconstitued by the people. Not has the just influence of petitions been diminished by this change, for while the House restrained desultory and intrusive discussion, it devised other means for giving publicity, and extended

<sup>1</sup> Such practices appear to have sombed to the former By this Some pactices appear to have scribed to the former By this been covery with agriation by means means men found their hands of petitions. Lord Clarendon states subscribed to petitions of which that in 1640, "when a multi-they before had never head"—tude of hands was procured, the Hist of Rebellion, in 357 petition itself was cut off, and a <sup>2</sup> Com Journ, xerv 16, Hannew one fiamed suitable to the said's Debates, 3id Ser, viv 156, design in hand, and annexed to the 197 long list of names, which were subculturation to the opinions of petitioners. Their voice is still heard and isspected in the consideration of every public measure, but it is no longer suffered to impede the toilsome work of legislation.

To these various modes of subjecting Parliament to the direct control of public opinion, must be added the modern custom of exacting pledges from candidates at The general election of 1774 appears to have been the first occasion, on which it prevailed so far as to attract public notice 2 Many popular questions, especially our differences with America, were then under discussion, and in many places, tests were proposed to candidates, by which they were required to support or oppose the leading measures of the time was forward in encouraging a practice so consonant with lus own political principles, and volunteered a test for himself and his colleague, Sergeant Glynn, at the Middlesex election Many candidates indignantly refused the proposed test even when they were favourable to the views, to which it was sought to pledge them At this period. Mr Burke explained to the electors of Bristol,-with that philosophy and breadth of constitutional principle, which distinguished him, -the relations of a representative to his constituents "His unbiassed opinion, his mature judgment, his enlightened conscience, he ought not to sacrifice to you, to any man, or to any set of men living Your representative owes you, not his industry only, but his judgment. and he betrays, instead of serving you, if he sacrifices Government and legislation it to your opinion are matters of reason and judgment, and not of inclination, and what sort of leason is that in which the determination precedes the discussion,-in which one set of men deliberate, and another decide?

&lt;sup>1</sup> About a thousand petitions are with the signatures, relating to annually pentited in extenso, and every subject all petitions are classified so as to 2 Adolphus, Hist, ii 148 exhibit the number of petitions,

Parliament is not a congress of ambassadors from different and hostile interests. but Parliament is a deliberative assembly of one nation, with one interest, -that of the whole, where not local purposes, not local prejudices, ought to guide, but the general good, resulting from the general reason of the whole" 1

Since that time, however, the relations between representatives and their constituents have become more intimate, and the constitutional theory of pledges has been somewhat modified According to the true principles of representation, the constituents elect a man in whose character and general political views they have confidence, and their representative enters the Legislature a free agent, to assist in its deliberations, and to form his own independent judgment upon all public measures If the contrary were universally the rule. representatives would become delegates, and government by the entire body of the people, would be substatuted for representative instatutions 2 But the political conditions of our own time have brought occasional pledges more into harmony with the spirit of the constitution. The political education of the people,-the pub-

lecting men, constituencies pionounce upon measures, in place of time exaggeration, in the opinions choosing representatives to discuss of an able reviewer upon this subof an able terrewer upon this subpect "For a long time past we in one of three co-cidents and have, unconsciously, been burning the candle of the candle of the constitution at which degree what shall be exacted both ends, our electors have been of done, electors consider and de-usurping the functions of the House cree what shall be done themselves of Commons, while the House of It is a reaction towards the eld Commons has been monopolising Athenian plan of direct govern-those of the Parliament"— Ed ment by the people, practised be-Rev, Oct 1852, No 196, p 469 fore the principle of representation Again, p 470 "In place of se- was discovered."

&lt;sup>2</sup> Burke's Works, m 18-20 2 There is force, but at the same

heaty of all parhamentary proceedings, - and the free discussions of the press, have combined to force upon constatuencies, the estimation of measures as well as men Hence candidates have sought to recommend themselves by the advocacy of popular measures; and constituents have expected explicit declarations of the political faith of candidates And how can it be contended that upon such measures as catholic emancipation, parliamentary reform, and the repeal of the corn laws, constituencies were not entitled to know the opinions of their members? Unless the electors are to be deprived of their voice in legislation, such occasions as these were surely fit for their peculiar vigilance. At a dissolution, the Crown has often appealed directly to the sense of the people, on the policy of great public measures, and how could they respond to that appeal without satisfying themselves regarding the opinions and intentions of the candidates? Their response was found in the majority returned to the new Parliament, directly or indirectly pledged to support their decision 1

But while the right of electors to be assured of the political opinions of candidates has been generally admitted, the first principles of representative government are ever to be kept in view. A member, once elected, is free to act upon his own convictions and conscience. As a man of honour, he will violate no engagement which he may have thought it becoming to accept, but if he has a due respect for his own character, and for the dignity of his office, he will not yield himself to the petty meddling and dictation of busy knots of his constituents, who may assume to sway his judgment

Such being the multiplied relations of Parliament to

&lt;sup>1</sup> Speeches from the throne, 24th 22nd April, 1881, 21st March, March, 1784, 27th April, 1807; 1857.

in the reign of George III., it has deferred to the law, timed and respected other jurisdictions besides its own period signalised by the ill-advised attempts of the House of Commons to enlarge its powers, and assert too tenaciously its own privileges,-was yet marked by the abandonment of some of its ancient customs and immunities From the earliest times, the members of both Houses had enjoyed the privilege of freedom from arrest in all civil suits, and this immunity, -useful and necessary as regarded themselves, -had also extended to their servants The abuses of this privilege had long been notorious, and repeated attempts had already been made to discontinue it For that purpose bills were several times passed by the Lords, but miscarried in the Commons 1 At length, in 1770, a bill was agreed to by the Commons 2, and sent up to the House of Lords There it encountered unexpected opposition from several peers, but was carried by the powerful advocacy of Lord Mansfield 8 Nor was this the only privilege restrained by this useful Act Members and their servants had formerly enjoyed immunity from the people, let us inquire how, since its early excesses privilege

by members of both Houses, and their servants These abuses had already been partially restrained by several statutes 4. but it was reserved for this Act, to leave the ¹ Lond Mansfield's speech, may obth 1770, Pan Hist, xx 1974 to be reconciled with the fact tense to be consulty through the Commons, manuary passed by the Londs of the members who were inclined 1 to be switched 1 Lord Mansfield's speech, May Mem, 1v 147 But this is scarcely the distress of their goods, and from all civil suits, during the periods of privilege Such monstrous priviloges had been flagitiously abused; and few passages in Parliamentary history are more discreditable than the finvolous pretexts under which protections were claimed course of justice entirely free, and to afford no protection to members, but that of their persons from arrest

This same period witnessed the renunciation of an offensive custom, by which prisoners appeared before either House to receive judgment, kneeling at the bar Submission so abject, while it degraded the prisoner, exhibited privilege as odious, rather than awful, in the eyes of a free people In the late reign, the proud spirit of Mi. Murray had revolted against this indignity. and his contumacy had been punished by close confinement in Newgate 1 But in 1772, when privilege was most unpopular, the Commons formally renounced this opprobrious usage, by standing order 2 The Lords. less candid in their proceedings, silently discontinued the practice; but, by fictitious entries in their journal, still affected to maintain it

Parliament, having relinquished every invidious privilege, has not been without embair assments in exercising the powers necessary for maintaining its own authority and independence, and which, - if rightly used, are no restraint upon public liberty Each House has exercised a large jurisdiction, in declaring and enforcing its own privileges. It administers the law of Parliament · the courts administer the law of the land, and where subjects have considered themselves aggreeved by one jurisdiction, they have appealed to the other 8 In such cases the appeal has been to inferior courts,to courts whose judgments may again be reviewed by the High Court of Parliament The courts,-without assuming the right to limit the privileges of Parliament.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Paul Hist, xiv 804, Walpole's Mem of Geo II, 1 15 In 1047, xvi 48
David Jenkins, a Royabst Welsh All the punciples and authoriousles, had refused to kneel before ties upon this matter are collected. the Commons, and Sn John Maynard, Sir John Gayre, and others, before the Lords -Com Journ , v 400, Pal Hist., m 844, 880.

&lt;sup>2</sup> March 16th, 1772, Com Journ,

m Chap VI of the author's Treatise on the Law and Usage of Parhament

- have vet firmly maintained their own unfettered junisdiction, to try all causes legally brought before them, and to adjudge them according to the law, whether their judgment may conflict with privilege, as declared elsewhere, or not. A court of equity or common law can stay actions, by injunction or prohibition but neither House is able to interdict a suit, by any legal process Hence embarrassing contests have arisen between Parliament and the courts

The right of both Houses to imprison for contempt, Cost of Sir had been so often recognised by the courts, on writs of Francis Burdett habeas corpus, that it appeared scarcely open to further question. Yet, in 1810, Sir Francis Buildett demed the authority of the Commons, in his place in Parliament He enforced his demal in a letter to his constituents, and having himself been adjudged guilty of contempt, he determined to defy and resist their power direction of the House, the Speaker issued his warrant for the commitment of Sir Francis to the Tower disputed its legality, and resisted and turned out the Sergeant, who came to execute it he barred up his house, and appealed for protection to the Sheriffs of Middlesex The mob took his part, and being riotous, were dispersed in the streets, by the military For three days he defended himself in his house, while the authorities were consulting as to the legality of breaking into it, by force It was held that the Seigeant, in executing the Speaker's warrant, would be armed with all the powers of the law, and accordingly, on the third day, that officer having obtained the aid of a sufficient number of constables, and a military force, broke into the beleaguered house, and conveyed his prisoner to the Tower 1 The commitment of a popular opponent of privilege was followed by its usual consequences. The martyred prisoner was an object of sympathy and adulation,—the Commons were denounced as tyrants and oppressors

&lt;sup>1</sup> Ann Reg , 1810, p. 344 , Hansard's Deb , xvi 257, 454, &c. VOL. I. GG

Overcome by force, Sir Francis brought actions against the Speaker and the Sergeant, in the Court of King's Bench, for redress The House would have been justified by precedents and ancient usage, in resisting the prosecution of these actions, as a contempt of its authority, but instead of standing upon its privilege, it directed its officers to plead, and the Attorney-General to defend them The authority of the House was fully vindicated by the court, but Sir Francis prosecuted an appeal to the Exchequer Chamber, and to the House of Lords The judgment of the court below being affirmed, all conflict between law and privilege was averted. The authority of the House had indeed been questioned, but the courts. declared it to have been exercised in conformity with the law

Where the courts uphold the authonity of the House, all is well but what if they deny and repudiate it? Since the memorable cases of Ashby and White, and the electors of Aylesbury in 1704, no such case had ansen until 1837 when the cause of dispute was characteristic of the times. In the last century, we have seen the Commons contending for the inviolable secrecy of all then proceedings now they are found declaring their inherent right of publishing all their own papers, for the information of the public

The circumstances of this case may be briefly told In 1836, Messrs Hansaid, the printers of the House of Commons, had printed, by order of that House, the reports of the Inspectors of Prisons,—in one of which a book published by Stockdale, and found among the prisoners in Newgate, was described as obscene and indecent After the session, Stockdale brought an action against the printers, for libel The character of the book being proved, a verdict was given against him, upon a plea of justification but Lord Chief Justice Denman, who tried the cause, took occasion to say that "the fact of the House of Commons having directed Messrs Hansard to publish all their parliamentary reports, is no justification for them, or for any bookseller who publishes a parliamentary report, containing a libel against any man" The assertion of such a doctrine, was naturally startling to the House of Commons, and at the next meeting of Parliament, after an inquiry by a committee, the House declared "That the power of publishing such of its reports, votes, and proceedings as it shall deem necessary, or conducive to the public interests, is an essential incident to the constitutional functions of Parliament, more especially of this House, as the representative portion of it" It was further resolved, that for any person to institute a suit in order to call its privileges in question, or for any court to decide upon matters of privilege, inconsistent with the determination of either House, was a breach of puvilege 1

Stockdale, however, unmediately brought another Case of action, to which the House, - instead of acting upon its own recent resolutions. - directed Messrs Hansard to plead. The case was tried upon this single issue. -whether the printers were justified by the privilege and order of the House; and the Court of Queen's Bench unanimously decided against them

The position of the Commons was surrounded with

<sup>1</sup> Com Journ , xcn 418 , May's Law and Usage of Parliament, 4th Ed. 170, et seq

difficulties Beheving the judgment of the court to be erroneous, they might have sought its reversal by a writ of error But such a course was not compatible with their digmity It was not the conduct of their officer that was impugned, but their own authority, which they had solemnly asserted In pursuing a writ of error, they might be obliged, in the last resort, to seek justice from the House of Lords,—a tribunal of equal, but not superior, authority in matters of privilege; and having already pronounced their own judgment, such an appeal would be derogatory to their proper position in the state They were equally unwilling to precipitate a conflict with the courts. Their resolutions had been set at defiance, yet the damages and costs were directed to be paid! Their forbearance was not without humiliation It was resolved, however, that in case of any future action, Messrs Hansard should not plead at all; and that the authority of the House should be vindicated, by the exercise of its privileges.

During the recess of 1830, another actionwas brought, and judgment having gone against Messrs Hansard by default, the damages were assessed in the Sheriff's Court at 6001, and levied by the Sheriff's On the meeting of Parliament in 1840, the Sheriff's had not yet paid over the money to the plaintiff. The House now proceeded with the rigour which it had previously threatened,—but had forboine to exercise. Stockdale was immediately committed to the custody of the Sergeant-at-Arms, while Mr. Howard, his solicitor, escaped with a repirmand. The Sheriff's were directed to restore the money, which they had levied upon Messrs Hansard. Being bound by their duty to the Court of Queen's Bench, they refused to obey this order, and were also committed to the custody of the

Sergeant In the hope of some settlement of the difficulty, they retained possession of the money, until compelled by an attachment from the Court of Queen's Bench, to pay it over to Stockdale Much sympathy was justly excited by the imprisonment of these gentlemen,—who, acting in strict obedience to the law and the judgment of the court, had nevertheless endeavoured to avoid a contempt of the House of Commons, which, in the execution of their duty, they were constrained to commit Punished with reluctance,—and without the least feeling of resentment,—they were the imnocent victims of conflicting nuisdictions

In an earlie age the Commons, relying upon their own paramount authority, might even have proceeded to commit the Judges of the Cout of Queen's Bench,—for which a precedent was not wanting 1, but happily, the wise moderation of this age revolted from so violent and inseemly an exercise of power Confident in the justice and legality of their own proceedings,—defied by a low planntiff in an unworthy cause,—and their deliberate judgment overruled by an inferior court,—they yet acted with as much temper and forbearance, as the inextricable difficulties of their position would allow

Stockdale, while in custody, repeated his offence by bringing another action. He and his attorney were committed to Newgate, and Messrs Hansard were again ordered not to plead. Judgment was once more entered up against them, and another writ of inquiry issued, when Mr. France, the Under-Sheriff, anxious to avoid offence to the House, obtained leave to show cause before the court, why the writ should not be executed. Meanwhile, the indefatigable Stockdale

Jay v Topham, 1680, Com Journ., x 227

solaced his imprisonment, by bringing another action, for which his attorney's son, and his clerk, Mr Pearce, were committed

At length these vexatious proceedings were brought to a close, by the passing of an Act, providing that all such actions should be stayed on the production of a certificate or affidavit, that any paper, the subject of an action, was printed by order of either House of Parliament 1 Such an intervention of the supreme authority of Parliament, two years before, would have averted differences between concurrent junsdictions, which no other power was competent to reconcile No course was open to the Commons-befitting their high jurisdiction and dignity, - by which the obedience of courts and plaintiffs could be ensured their power of commitment was at once impotent, and oppiessive yet they could not suffer then authority to be wholly defied and contemned Hence then proceedings were mevitably marked by hesitation and inconsistency. In a case, for which the constitution has made no provision,even the wisdom of Sir Robert Peel, and the solid learning of Mi Sergeant Wilde were unequal to devise expedients, less open to objection 2

Another occasion immediately arose for further forbearance. Howard commenced an action of trespass against the officers of the House, who had taken him into custody. As it was possible that, in executing the Speaker's wailant, they might have exceeded their authority, the action was suffered to take its course. On the tinal, it appeared that they had remained some time in the plaintiff's house, after they had ascertained that he was from home; and on that ground, a verdict was obtained against them for 100l Howard brought a second action against Sir W Gosset, the Sergeantat-Arms, in which he was also successful, on the ground of the informality of the Speaker's warrant The Judges, however, took pains to show that their decision in no way impugned the authority of the House itself, The House, while it regarded this judgment as erroneous, could not but feel that its authority had been taifled with, in a spirit of narrow technicality, by an inferior court Still moderation prevailed in its counsels, and, as the act of an officer, and not the authority of the House itself, was questioned, it was determined not to resist the execution of the judgment, but to test its legality by a writ of e1101 The judgment was reversed by the unanimous decision of the Court of Exchequer Chamber As this last judgment was founded upon broader principles of law, than those adopted by the court below, it is probable that, in Stockdale's case, a Court of Error would have shown greater respect to the privileges of the Commons, than the Court of Queen's Bench had thought fit to pay, and it is to be regretted that the circumstances were not such as to justify an appeal to a higher jurisdiction

<sup>1 3 &</sup>amp; 4 Vict, c 9 Papers reflecting upon private character are Commons, 1889 (283); Report of sometimes printed for the use of Precedents, 1837, Hansard's Deb, members only

The increased power of the House of Commons, Increased under an imploved representation, has been patent and power of the Comindisputable Responsible to the people, it has, at the mone same time, wielded the people's strength. No longer subservient to the Crown, the ministers, and the peerage, it has become the predominant authority in the state But it is characteristic of the British constitution, and Their moa proof of its freedom from the spirit of democracy, deration that the more dominant the power of the House of increase Commons,—the greater has been its respect for the law, and the more carefully have its acts been restrained within the proper limits of its own jurisdiction. While its authority was uncertain and ill-defined, — while it was stauggling against the Crown,—jealous of the House of Lords,—distristful of the press,—and irresponsible to the people,—it was tempted to exceed its constitutional powers, but since its political position has been established, it has been less provoked to stain its jurisdiction, and deference to public opinion, and the experience of past errors, have taught it wisdom and moderation

The proceedings of the House in regard to Wilkes, present an instructive contrast to its recent conduct in forwarding the admission of Jews to Parliament the former case, its own privileges were strained or abandoned at pleasure, and the laws of the land outraged, in order to exclude and persecute an obnoxious member 1 How did this same powerful body act in the case of Baron de Rothschild and Mr Salomons? Here the House,—faithful to the principles of religious liberty, which it had long upheld,-was earnest in its desire to admit these members to their place in the legislature. They had been lawfully chosen they laboured under no legal disability, and they claimed the privileges of members A few words in the oath of abjuration, alone prevented them from taking their seats A large majority of the House was favourable to their claims the law was doubtful, and the precedent of Mr Pease, a Quaker, - who had been allowed to omit these words,-was unged by considerable authorities, as a valid ground for their admission. Yet the House, dealing with the seats of its own members, -over which nt has always had exclusive jurisdiction, - and with every inducement to accept a broad and liberal interpretation of the law, - nevertheless administered it strictly, and to the very letter 1 For several years, the House had endeavoured to solve the difficulty by legislation Its failures, however, did not tempt it to usurp legislative power, under the semblance of judicial interpretation. But it persevered in passing bills, in various forms, until it ultimately forced upon the other House an amendment of the law

See supra, p 384, &c

The limits within which Parliament, or either House, Control may constitutionally exercise a control over the executive government, have been defined by usage, upon the excutive principles consistent with a true distribution of powers. in a free state and limited monarchy Parhament has no du ect control over any single department of the State It may order the production of papers, for its information2 . it may investigate the conduct of public officers, and may pronounce its opinion upon the manner in which every function of the government has been, or ought to be, discharged. But it cannot convey its orders or directions to the meanest executive officer, in relation to the performance of his duty Its power over the executive is exercised indirectly, -but not the less effectively, -through the responsible ministers of the Crown These ministers regulate the duties of every department of the state; and are responsible for their proper performance, to Parliament, as well as to the Crown Parliament disapprove of any act, or pohey of the government, - ministers must conform to its opinion, or forfeit its confidence. In this manner, the House of Commons, having become the dominant body in the legislature, has been able to direct the conduct of the government, and control its executive administration of public affairs, without exceeding its constitutional powers. It has a right to advise the Crown,—even as to the exercise of the prerogative itself, and should its advice be dissegarded, it wields the power of impeachment, and holds the purse-strings of the state History abounds with examples, in which the exercise of prerogative has been controlled by Parliament. Even questions of peace and war, which are peculiarly within the province of prerogative, have been resolved, again and again, by the interposition of Parliament. From the reign of Edward III., Parliament has been consulted by the Crown, and has fieely offered its advice on questions of peace and war.\(^1\) The exercise of this right, —so far from being a modern invasion of the royal pregative,—is an ancient constitutional usage. It was not, however, until the power of Parliament had prevailed over prerogative, that it had the means of enforcing its advice.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Hansard's Deb, July 29th and Soth, and Aug. 5th, 1850, July 18th only be obtained by address to the and 21st, 1851. See also Chap XII. on Civil and Religious Laberty

At a time when the influence of the Crown had attained its highest point under George III, the House of Commons was able to bring to a close the disastrous American War, against the personal wall of the king himself. Having presented an address against the further prosecution of offensive war,—to which they had received an evasive answer,—the House proceeded to declare, that it would "consider as enemies to his Majesty and this country all who should advise, or by any means attempt the further prosecution of offensive war on the continent of America, for the purpose of reducing the revolted colonies to obedience by force" 2

E g. Edw III, Parl Hist, 1 vi 609
 Henry VII., viud, 452, James Feb. 27th and March 4th, 1782,
 I, viud, 1288, Queen Anne, viud, Parl Hist, xxn 1064, 1086, 1087.

Not did the House rest until it had driven Lord North, the king's war minister, from power

During the long war with France, the government was pressed with repeated motions, in both Houses, for opening negotiations for peace 1 Ministers were strong enough to resist them, but,-at a period remarkable for assertions of prerogative, objections to such motions, on constitutional grounds, were raiely heard Indeed the Crown, by communicating to Parliament the breaking out of hostilities 2 or the commencement of negotiations for peace8, has invited its advice and assistance That advice may be unfavourable to the policy of ministers, and the indispensable assistance of Parliament may be withheld If the Crown be dis- way with satisfied with the judgment of Parliament, an appeal China, may still be made to the final decision of the people In 1857, the House of Commons condemned the policy of the war with China, but ministers, instead of submitting to its censure, appealed to the country, and obtamed its approval.

Upon the same principles, Parhament has assumed the Advice of right of advising the Crown, in regard to the exercise of Parliament the prerogative of dissolution In 1675, an address was dissolution moved in the House of Loids, praying Charles II to dissolve the Parhament, and on the rejection of the motion, several Lords entered their protest 4 Lord Chatham's repeated attempts to induce the House of Lords to address the Crown to dissolve the Parhament which had declared the incapacity of Wilkes, have been lately not need.¹ The address of the Commons, after the dismissal of the Coalition Ministry, praying the King not to dissolve Parliament, has been described elsewhere.¹ Lord Wharnchiffe's vain effort to arrest the dissolution of Parliament in 1831, has also been adverted to §

&lt;sup>1</sup> Lord Stanhope, the Marquess of Lansdowne, &c. Dec 15th, 1792, June 17th, 1793, &c., Mi Grey, Feb 21st, 1794, &c., Mi Whit-bread, March 9th, 1794, Mr Wilberforce, May 27th, 1705, Mr Shen- Rockingham's Mem, n 139 dan, Dec 8th, 1795.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Feb 11th, 1793, May 22nd, 1815, March 27th, 1854, &c 5 Dec 8th, 1795, Oct 29th, 1801, Jan 31st, 1856 4 Lords' Journ xm 83, Lord

But though the right of Parliament to address the Crown, on such occasions is unquestionable,—its exercise has been restrained by considerations of policy, and party tactics The leaders of parties,-profiting by the experience of Mr. Fox and Lord North .- have since been too wise to risk the forfeiture of public esteem, by factiously opposing the right of ministers to appeal from the House of Commons to the people. Unless that right has been already exercised, the alternatives of resigning office or dissolving Parliament have been left,by general consent,-to the judgment of ministers who cannot command the confidence of the House of Commons In the exercise of their discretion, ministers have been met with remonstrances, but sullen acquiescence on the part of their opponents, has given place to violent addresses, and measures for stopping the supplies

As Parhament may tender its advice to the Crown, regarding its own dissolution, so the people, in their turn, have claimed the right of praying the Crown to exercise its prerogative, in order to give them the means of condemning the conduct of Paihament In 1701, during a fierce contest between the Wing and Tory parties, numerous petitions and addresses were presented to William III at the instance of the Whigs, praying for the dissolution of the Paihament, which was soon afterwards dissolved 4 The constitutional character of these addresses having been questioned, was upheld by a vote of the House of Commons, which affirmed "that it is the undoubted right of the people of England to petition or address the King, for the calling, sitting, and dissolving Parliaments, and for the redressing of ellevances" In 1710, similar tactics were resorted to by the Tories, when addresses were presented to Queen Anne, praying for a dissolution, and assume her Majesty that the people would choose none but such as were faithful to the Crown, and zealous for the Church 2

&lt;sup>1</sup> Supra, p 408, 404 <sup>2</sup> Supra, p 62 <sup>3</sup> Supra, p 118

<sup>4</sup> Burnet's Own Time, 1v 543 Rockingham Mem, u 105.

In 1769, Lord Chatham sought public support of the same kind, in his efforts to obtain a dissolution of Paihament Lord Rockingham and some of the leading Whigs, who doubted at first, were convinced of the constitutional propriety of such a course, and Loid Camden expressed a decisive opinion, affirming the right of the subject 8 The people were justly dissatisfied with the recent proceedings of the House of Commous, and were encouraged by the Opposition to lay their complaints at the foot of the throne, and to pray for a dissolution.

The contest between Mr Pitt and the Coalition was characterised by similar proceedings While the Commons were protesting against a dissolution, the supporters of Mr Pitt were actively engaged in obtaining addresses to his Majesty, to assure him of the support of the people, in the constitutional exercise of his prerogative 4

Papers, 1v 446 Somerville's Reign of Queen Anne, 409, Smollett's Hist, n. 191, Grenville Papers, 1v 453

<sup>3 &</sup>quot; His answer was full and manly, that the right is absolute,

&lt;sup>1</sup> Pail Hist, v 1889, Grenville and unquestionable for the exci-aneral iv 446 cise" Lord Chatham to Lord Temple, Nov 8th, 1769, Grenville Papers, 1v 479

<sup>4</sup> Sec Address of the City, Ann. Reg , 1784, p 4, &c.

The House of Commons in the first instance,-and , the people in the last resort,-have become arbiters of the fate of the ministers of the Crown Ministers may have the entire confidence of their Sovereign, and be all-powerful in the House of Lords, but without a majority of the House of Commons, they are unable to administer the affairs of the country The fall of ministries has more often been the result of their failure to carry measures which they have proposed, or of adverse votes on general questions of public policy, but frequently it has been due,particularly in modern times, -to express representations to the Crown, that its ministers have not the confidence of the House of Commons Where such votes have been agreed to by an old Parhament,as in 1784,-ministers have still had before them the alternative of a dissolution, but when they have already appealed to the country for support,-as m 1841, and again in 1859,-a vote affirming that they have not the confidence of the House of Commons, has been conclusive

The disapprobation of ministers by the House of Commons being decisive, the expression of its confidence has, at other times, arrested their impending fall. Thus in 1831, Lord Grey's ministry, embarrassed by an adverse vote of the other House, on the second reform bill<sup>1</sup>, was supported by a declaration of the continued confidence of the House of Commons

And at other times, the House has interposed its advice to the Crown, on the formation of administrations, with a view to favour or obstruct political arrangements, then in progress Thus, in 1784, when negotiations had been commenced for a fusion of parties, resolutions

&lt;sup>1</sup> Supra, p. 118

were laid before his Majesty expressing the opinion of the House of Commons, that the situation of public affairs required a "firm, efficient, extended, and united administration, entitled to the confidence of the people. and such as may have a tendency to put an end to the divisions and distractions of the country"1 Similar advice was tendered to the Prince Regent in 1812, after the death of Mr Perceval; and to William IV, in 1832, on the resignation of Earl Grev.2

But this constant responsibility of ministers, while it Impeachhas made their position dependent upon the pleasure of ments.

Parliament, has protected fallen ministers from its vengeauce When the acts and policy of statesmen had been dictated by their duty to the Crown alone, without regard to the approval of Parliament, they were in danger of being crushed by vindictive impeachments. and attainders Strafford had died on the scaffold. Clarendon had been driven into exile 8, Danby had suffered a long imprisonment in the Tower 4, Oxford, Bolingbroke, and Ormond had been disgraced and runed 5, at the suit of the Commons But Pauliamentary responsibility has prevented the commission of those political crimes, which had provoked the indignation of the Commons, and when the conduct or policy of ministers has been condemned, loss of power has been their only punishment. Hence the ranty of impeachments in later times The last hundred years present but two cases of impeachment,—the one against Mr. Warren Hastings, on charges of misgovernment in

Parl Hist, xxiv 450, Ann Reg , 1784, p. 265

<sup>2</sup> Supra, p. 104, 355, Hansard's
Deb , 1st Ser , xxm 249

<sup>3</sup> Having gone abroad pending his impeachment, an Act of banish-

Parliament,

<sup>4</sup> Not being brought to trial, he was admitted to bail by the Court of King's Bench, after an imprison-ment of five years St Ti , xi 871. * Oxford was imprisoned for two years in the Tower Bolingbroke ment and incapacity was passed by and Ormond, having escaped, were, attunted.

India,-the other against Lord Melville, for alleged malversation in his office. The former was not a minister of the Crown, and he was accused of offences committed beyond the reach of Parliamentary control. and the offences charged against the latter, had no relation to his political duties as a responsible minister

The case of Mr Warren Hastings finally established the constitutional doctrine, that an impeachment by the Commons is not terminated by any prorogation or dissolution of Parhament It had been affirmed by the Lords in 1678, after an examination of precedents when Lord Stafford fell a victim to its assertion, and six years afterwards, it had been demed, in order to secure the escape of the "popush lords." then under impeachment 2 Lord Danby's lingering impeachment had been continued by the first decision, and annulled by the last The same question having ansen after the lapse of a century, Parliament was called upon to review the precedents of former impeachments, and to pass its judgment upon the contradictory decisions of the Loids Many of the precedents were so obscure as to furnish arguments on both sides of the question, conflicting opinions were to be found amongst text-writers, and the most cmment lawvers of the day were not agreed 8 But the masterly and conclusive speech of Mr. Pitt was alone sufficient to settle the controversy, even on the grounds of law and precedent On broad constitutional principles, the first statesmen of all parties concurred

2 May 22nd, 1685. Lords' Joun, for the abatement Lord Mansfield. Lord Camden, Lord Loughborough, <sup>3</sup> Lord Thurlow, Lord Kenyon, and Sn William Grant, maintained Sir Richard Arden, Sir Archibald its continuance,

March 19th, 19th, 1678 Lords' Macdonald, Sir John Scott, Mi min . xui 464, 496 Mitford, and Mi Erskine contended Joun, xui 464, 466

in upholding the inviolable right of the Commons to pursue an impeachment, without interruption from any act of the Crown It could not be suffered that offenders should be snatched from punishment, by ministers who might be themselves concerned in their guilt. Nor was it just to the accused, that one impeachment should be an ested before a judgment had been obtained, and another preferred,-on the same or different grounds,-perhaps after his defence had suggested new evidence to condemn him. Had not the law already provided for the continuance of impeachments, it would have been necessary to declare it. But it was agreed in both Houses, by large majorities, that by the law and custom of Parliament, an impeachment pending in the House of Lords continued in statu quo, from one Session and from one Parliament to another, until a judgment had been given 1

As parhamentary responsibility has spared ministers Improved the extreme penalties of impeachments, - so it has the Clown protected the Crown from those dangerous and haras- with the sing contests with the Commons, with which the earlier history of this country abounds. What the Crown has lost in power, it has gained in security and peace Until the Commons had fully established their constitutional rights, they had been provoked to assert them with violence, and to press them to extreme conclusions; but they have exercised them, when acknowledged, with moderation and forbearance

At the same time, ministers of the Crown have en- Strong countered greater difficulties, from the increased power govenand independence of the Commons, and the more direct ments

¹ Com Deb , Pail Hist , vxvii Loids' Journ , vxxix 125, Toni-1018, ct seq , Loids' Deb , ibid , line's Life of Pitt, in. 161 xxix 514 , Report of Precidents ,

VOT. I

action of public opinion upon measures of legislation and policy. They are no longer able to fall back upon the Crown for support their patronage is reduced, and their influence diminished. They are left to secure a majority, not so much by party connexions, as by good measures and popular principles. Any error of judgment,—any failure in policy or administration, is liable to be visited with instant censure. Defeated in the Commons, they have no resource but an appeal to the country, unaided by those means of influence, upon which ministers formerly relied.

Their responsibility is great and perilous; but it has at least protected them from other embarrassments, of nearly equal danger. When the Crown was more powerful, what was the fate of munstres? The first ten years of the regg of George III. witnessed the full of five feeble administrations, and their instability was mainly due to the restless energies of the king Until Mi. Pitt came into power, there had not been one strong administration during this reign. It was the king lumself who overthiew the Coalition Ministry, the absolute government of Mr. Pitt, and the administration of "All the Talents".

For more than ten years after Mr Pitt's fall, there was again a succession of weak administrations, of short duration If the king could uphold a ministry—he could also weaken or destroy it From this danger, governments under the new parliamentary system, have been comparatively free More responsible to Parliament, they have become less dependent upon the Crown The confidence of the one, has guarded them from the displasaure of the other

No cause of ministerial weakness has been more frequent than disunion. It is the common lot of men acting together, and is not peculiar to any time, or political conditions Yet when ministers looked to the Crown for support, and relied upon the great termtorial lords for a parliamentary majority,-what causes were so fruitful of jealousies and dissensions, as the intrigues of the court, and the rivalries of the propnietors of boroughs? Here, again, governments deriving their strength and union from Parliament . and the people, have been less exposed to danger in this form Governments have, indeed, been weakened. as in former times, by divisions among their own party. but they have been, in some measure, protected from faction, by the greater responsibility of all parties to public opinion This protection will be more assured, when the old system of government, by influence and patronage, shall give place to the recognition of national interests, as the sole basis of party

The responsibility of ministers has been further simplified, by the dominant power of the Commons. The Lords may sometimes thwart a ministry, reject or mutilate its measures, and even condemn its policy, but they are powerless to overthiow a ministry supported by the Commons, or to uphold a ministry which the Commons have condemned Instead of many masters, a government has only one. Nor can it be justly said, that thus master has been severe, exacting, or capitations.

It can neither be affirmed that strong governments were characteristic of the parliamentary system, sub-veited by the reform act, nor that weak governments have been characteristic of the new system, and the result of it. In both periods, the stability of administrations has been due to other causes. If in the latter period, nimisters have been overthrown, who,

at another time might have been upheld by the influence of the Crown, there have yet been governments supported by a pathamentary majority and public approbation, stonger in moral force,—and more capable of overpowering interests adverse to the national weltare,—than any ministries deriving their power from less porular sources

After the 1efoim act, Lord Grey's ministry was all-powerful, until it was dissolved by distinuou in the cabinet. No government was ever stronger than that of Sn Robert Peel, until it was broken up by the repeal of the corn laws. Lord Aberdeen's cabinet was scarcely less strong, until it fell by distinuou and military failures. What government was more powerful than Lord Palmerston's first administration, until it split upon the sunken rock of the Orism conspiracy?

On the other hand, the ministry of Lord Melbourne was enfeebled by the disunion of the Liberal party. The first ministry of Sir Robert Peel, and both the ministices of Lord Dorby were nevitably weak,—being formed upon a hopeless minority in the House of Commons. Such causes would have produced weakness at any time, and are not chargeable upon the caprices, or ungovernable temper, of a reformed Parlament. And thoughout this period, all administrations,—whether strong or weak, and of whatever political party,—lelying mainly upon public confidence, have labouned successfully in the cause of good government, and have secured to the people more sound laws, prosperity, and contentinent, than have been emjoyed at any previous epoch, in the listory of this country.

Control of the Commons over supplies

One of the most ancient and valued lights of the Commons, is that of voting money and granting taxes to the Crown, for the public service From the earliest times, they have made this right the means of extorting concessions from the Crown, and advancing the liberties of the people They upheld it with a bold spirit against the most arbitrary kings, and the Bill of Rights crowned their final triumph over preroeative. They upheld it with equal firmness against the Lords For centuries they had resented any "meddling" of the other House "with matter of supply." and in the reign of Charles II , they successfully maintamed their exclusive night to determine "as to the matter, the measure and the time" of every tax imposed upon the people

In the same reign, they began to scrutimse the public expenditure, and introduced the salutary practice of appropriating their grants to particular purposes But they had not yet learned the value of a constant control over the revenue and expenditure of the Crown, and their liberality to Charles, and afterwards to James II, enabled those monarchs to violate the public liberties

The experience of these reigns, prevented a repetition Their libeof the error, and since the Revolution, the grants of the the Clown. Commons have been founded on annual estimates.—laid before them on the responsibility of ministers of the Crown,—and strictly appropriated to the service of the year This constant control over the public expenditure has, more than any other cause, vested in the Commons the supreme power of the state, yet the results have been favourable to the Crown. When the Commons had neither information as to the necessities of the state, nor securities for the proper application of their grants, - they had often failed to respond to the solicitation of the king for subsidies, -or then libe-tabty had fallen short of his demands 1. But not once since the Revolution, have the demands of the Crown for the public service, been refused Whatever sums ministers have stated to be necessary, for all the essential services of the state, the Commons have ficely granted 2 Not a soldier has been struck from the rank and file of the army: not a sailor or a ship from the fleet, by any vote of the Commons So fu from opposing the demands of the Crown, they have rather laid themselves open to the charge of too facile an acquiescence in a constantly increasing expenditure Since they have assumed the control of the finances. the expenditure has increased about fiftyfold, and a stamendous national debt has been created Doubtless then control has been a check upon ministers. The fear of their remonstrances, has restrained the produgality of the executive, but parsimony cannot be justly laid to then charge. The people may have some grounds for complaining of their stewardship, but assuredly the Crown and its ministers have none

Ministers defeated on financial measures

While voting the estimates, however, the Commons have sometimes dissented from the financial arrangements proposed by ministers Responding to the pecumary demands of the Crown, they have disapproved

<sup>2</sup> In 1625, the Commons post-mons granted one half only— coned the supplies demanded by Ibid, 1379 Charles I for carrying on the war with Spain — Parl Hist, in 35 In 1675, they refused a supply to Charles II, to take off the anticichaiss 11, to take off the antici-pations upon his revenue—Ibid, iv 757 In 1677, they declined a further supply till his Majesty's alliances were made known—Ibid, 879. And in the next year they refused him an additional revenue —Ibid, 1000 In 1685, James II - required 1,400,000k, the Com-

<sup>2</sup> With a few exceptions, so trifling as to be almost ridiculous, it will be found that the annual estimates have been voted without deduction, e g in 1858, the only result of the vigilance of Parliament was a disallowance of 3001 as the salary of the travelling agent of the National Gallery! In 1859, the salmy of the Register of Sasines was refused, but on the recommitment of the resolution, was restored!

the policy, by which it was sought to meet them In 1767 Mr Charles Townshend, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, proposed to continue for one year, the land tax of four shillings in the pound, but on the motion of Mr Grenville, the tax was reduced to three shillings, by which the budget sustained a loss of half a million This was the first occasion, since the Revolution, on which a minister had been defeated upon any financial meagure 1

Throughout the French war, the Commons agreed to every grant of money, and to every new tax and loan. proposed by successive administrations. But on the termination of the war, when the ministers desired to continue one half of the war property tax, amounting to about seven millions and a half,-such was the national repugnance to that tax, that they sustained a signal defeat.2 Again in 1852, Loid Derby's ministry were out-voted on their proposal for doubling the house tax.8 But when the Commons have thus differed from the ministry, the questions at assue have involved the form and incidence of taxation, and not the necessities of the state; and their votes have neither diminished the public expenditure, nor reduced the ultimate burthens upon the people.

Not have the Commons, by postponing grants, or in stopping other words, by "stopping the supplies," endeavoured the supto coerce the other powers in the state No more formidable instrument could have been placed in the hands of a popular assembly, for bending the executive to its will. It had been wielded with effect, when the prerogatave of kings was high, and the influence of the Com-

&lt;sup>1</sup> Parl Hist, xvi 362,

<sup>2</sup> Ayes 201, Noss 298, Hansaud's

Mem., n. 318

Deb., 1st Sei, xxxiii 451, Lord

Brougham's Speeches, 1 495, Lord

1693

mons low, but now the weapon hes rusty in the atmoury of constitutional waifare. In 1781, Mr Thomas Pitt proposed to delay the ganating of the supplies for a few days, in order to extort from Loid North a pledge regarding the war in America. It was then admitted that no such proposal had been made since the Revolution, and the House resolved to proceed with the commattee of supply, by a large majority. In the same session Loid Rockingham moved, in the House of Lords, to postpone the third reading of a land tax bill, until explanations had been given regarding the causes of Admiral Kempenfeldt's retreat, but did not press it to a division.

The precedent of 1784, is the solitary instance in which the Commons have exercised their power of delaying the supplies They were provoked to use it, by the unconstitutional exercise of the influence of the Crown, but it failed them at their utmost need?—and the experiment has not been repeated. Their responsibility, indeed, has become too great for so perilous a proceeding. The establishments and public credit of the country are dependent on their votes, and are not to be lightly thrown into disorder. Nor are they driven to this expedient for coercing the executive, as they have other means, not less effectual, for directing the policy of the state

While the Commons have promptly responded to the demands of the Crown, they have endeavoured to guard themselves against importunities from other quarters, and from the unwise liberality of their own members. They will not listen to any petition or motion which involves a grant of public money, until it has received the recommendation of the Crown1, and they have further protected the public purse, by delays and other forms, against hasty and inconsiderate resolutions? Such precautions have been the more necessary, as there are no checks upon the liberality of the Commons, but such as they impose upon themselves The Lords have no voice in questions of expenditure, save that of a formal assent to the Appropriation Acts They are excluded from it by the spirit, and by the forms of the constitution

<sup>1</sup> Nov 30, 1781, Parl Hist, xxii for the Speaker to leave the Chan 751, Ayes 172, Noss 77. Mr T. 2 Nov 19, Pail Hist, xxii, 865. Pitt had merely opposed the motion 3 Soo supra, p 64.

Not less exclusive has been the right of the Commons Exclusive to grant taxes, to meet the public expenditure rights are indeed inseparable; and are founded on the mons consame principles "Taxation," said Lord Chatham, "is taxation no part of the governing, or legislative power The taxes are a voluntary gift and grant of the Commons alone In legislation the three estates of the realm are alike concerned, but the concurrence of the peers and the Crown to a tax, is only necessary to clothe it with the form of a law. The gift and giant is of the Commons alone "8 On these principles, the Commons had declared that a money bill was sacred from amendment In their gifts and grants, they would brook no meddling Such a position was not established without hot controversies 4. Nor was it ever expressly admitted by the Lords 5, but as they

These the Com-

<sup>2</sup> See May's Law and Usage of Bills, 1860 Parliament, 4th ed , 512 2 Paul Hist, xvi 99

in the Appendix to the third volume Lordships cannot allow."

&lt;sup>1</sup> Standing Cider, Dec 11th, of Hatsell's Precedents, and in the Report of the Commuttee on Tax

<sup>5</sup> To the claim, as very broadly asserted by the Commons in 1700, at 4 The Reports of the conferences a conference upon the Bill for the

were unable to shake the strong determination of the Commons, they tacitly acquiesced, and submitted. For one hundred and fifty years, there was scarcely a dispute upon this privilege. The Lords, knowing how any amendment affecting a charge upon the people, would be received by the Commons, either abstained from making it, or averted misunderstanding, by not returning the amended bill. And when an amendment was made, to which the Commons could not agree, on the ground of privilege alone, it was their custom to save their privilege, by sending up a new bill, embracing the Lords' amendment

But if the Lords might not amend money bills, could they not reject them? This yeav question was discussed in 1671 The Commons had then denied the right of amendment, on the broadest grounds. In reply, the Lords argued thus - "If this night should be denied, the Lords have not a negative voice allowed them, in bills of this nature; for if the Lords, who have the power of treating, advising, giving counsel, and applying remedies, cannot amend, abate, or refuse a bill in part, by what consequence of leason, can they enjoy a liberty to reject the whole? When the Commons shall think fit to question it, they may pretend the same grounds for it" The Commons, however, admitted the right of rejection "Your Loidships," they said, "have a negative to the whole" "The king must deny the whole of every Bill, or pass it, yet this takes not away his negative voice. The Lords and Commons must accept the whole general pardon or deny it; yet this takes not away their negative "1 And again in 1689, it was stated by a committee of the Commons, that the Lords are "to pass all or reject all. <sup>1</sup> Hatsell, ni, 405, 422, 423 without diminution or alteration" But these admissions cost the Commons nothing, at that time To reject a money bill, was to withhold supplies from the Crown --- an act of which the Lords were not to be suspected. The Lords themselves were fully alive to this difficulty, and complained that "a hard and ignoble choice was left to them, either to refuse the Crown supplies when they are most necessary, or to consent to ways and proportions of aid, which neither their own underment or interest, nor the good of the government and neonle, can admit "2 In argument, the Commons were content to recognise this barren right; yet so broad were the grounds on which they rested then own claims of privilege,-and so stubborn was their temper in maintaining them,-that it may well be questioned whether they would have submitted to its practical exercise. If the Lords had rejected a bill for granting a tax,-would the Commons have immediately granted another? Would they not rather have sat with folded arms, rejoicing that the people were spared a new unpost, while the king's treasury was beggared by the interference of the Lords ?

Taxes were then of a temporary character They Temporary were granted for one year, or for a longer period, ac- and per-manent cording to the exigencies of the occasion. Hearth taxes money was the first permanent tax, imposed in 1663 8 No other tax of that character appears to have been granted, until after the Revolution; when permanent duties were raised on beer 4, on salt 5, on vellum

&lt;sup>1</sup> Hatsell, in 452. This admission, however, is not of equal 405 authority, as it formed part of the leasons reported from a committeo, which were re-committed, and not adopted by the House

&lt;sup>2</sup> Conference, 1671, Hatsell, m 3 13 & 14 Charles II c 10

Will and Mary, Sess. 1, c 24, & 6 Will and Mary, c 31

and paper1, on houses2, and on coffee 8 These duties were generally granted as a security for loans, and the financial policy of permanent taxes increased with the national debt, and the extension of public credit This policy somewhat altered the position of the Lords, in relation to tax bills. Taxes were from time to time varied and repealed, and to such alterations of the law. the Lords might have refused their assent, without withholding supplies from the Crown But such opportunities were not sought by the Lords They had given up the contest upon privilege, and wisely left to the Commons, the responsibility and the odium, of constantly increasing the public burthens. Taxes and loans were multiplied, but the Lords accepted them, without question They rarely even discussed financial measures, and when in 1763, they opposed the third reading of the Wines and Cider Duties Bill, it was observed that this was the first occasion, on which they had been known to divide upon a money bill.4

But while they abstained from interference with the supplies and ways and means, granted by the Commons for the public service, they occasionally rejected or postponed other bills, incidentally affecting supply and taxation : bills imposing or repealing protective duties bills for the regulation of trade, and bills embracing other disputable matters of legislation, irrespective of taxation Of these, the greater part were measures of legislative policy, lather than measures of revenue, and with the single exception of the Corn Bill of 1827, their fate does not appear to have excited any realousy, in the sensitive minds of the Commons.

<sup>1 9 &</sup>amp; 10 Will III c. 25 2 5 Anne, c 13

<sup>4</sup> March 30th, 1763, Paul Hist, xv. 1316.

<sup>*7</sup> Ibid, c 7. c

At length, in 1860, the Lords exercised their power, Paper in a novel and startling form. The Commons had peal Bill, resolved, among other financial arrangements for the 1860 year, to increase the property tax and stamp duties, and to repeal the duties on paper The Property Tax and Stamp Duties Bills had already received the royal assent, when the Paper Duties Repeal Bill was received by the Lords It had encountered strong opposition in the Commons, where its third reading was agreed to, by the small majority of mine And now the Lords determined, by a majority of eighty-nine, to postpone the second reading for six months Having assented to the increased taxation of the annual budget, they refused the rehef, by which it had been accompanied

Never until now, had the Lords rejected a bill for Relative imposing or repealing a tax, laised solely for the inches numposes of revenue,-and involving the supplies and Houses ways and means, for the service of the year. Never had they assumed the right of reviewing the calculations of the Commons, legarding levenue and expenditure In principle, all previous invasions of the cherished rights of the Commons, had been triffing compared with this What was a mere amendment in a money bill, compared with its intevocable rejection? But on the other hand, the legal right of the Lords to reject any bill whatever, could not be disputed Even their constitutional right to "negative the whole" of a money bill, had been admitted by the Commons themselves Nor was this strictly, and in technical form, a money bill. It neither granted any tax to the Crown. nor recited that the paper duty was repealed, in consideration of other taxes imposed. It simply repealed the existing law, under which the duty was levied

Technically, no pirvlege of the Commons, as previously declared, had been infringed. Yet it was contended, with great force, that to undertake the office of revising the balances of supplies and ways and means,—which had never been assumed by the Loids, during two hundred years,—was a breach of constitutional usage, and a violation of the first principles, upon which the privileges of the House are founded. If the letter of the law was with the Lords, its spirit was clearly with the Commons

Had the position of parties, and the temper of the times been such as to encourage a violent collision between the two Houses,-there had rarely been an occasion more hkely to provoke it. But this embarrassment the government were anxious to avert, and many causes concurred to favour moderate counsels. A committee was therefore appointed in the Commons, to search for precedents The search was long and intricate the report copious and elaborate, but no opinion was given upon the grave question at issue. The lapse of six weeks had already moderated the heat and excitement of the controversy, when on the 5th July, Lord Palmerston, on the part of the government, explained the course which he counselled the House to adopt Having stated what were the acknowledged privileges of the House, and referred to the precedents collected by the committee, he expressed his opinion that the Lords, in rejecting the Paper Duties Bill, had no desire to invade the constitutional rights of the Commons, but had been actuated, as on former occasions, by motives of public policy He could not believe that they were commencing a deliberate course of interference with the peculiar functions of the Commons But should that appear to be their intention, the latter would know how to vindicate their privileges, if invaded, and would be supported by the people He deprecated a collision between the two Houses Any one who should provoke it, would incur a grave responsibility. With these views, he proposed three resolutions. The first asserted generally, "that the right of granting aids and supplies to the Crown, is in the Commons alone" The second affirmed, that although the Lords had sometimes exercised the power of rejecting bills of several descriptions, iclating to taxation, yet the exercise of that power was " ustly regarded by this House with peculiar jealousy, as affecting the right of the Commons to grant the supplies, and to provide the ways and means for the service of the vear " The third stated, "that to guard for the future, against an undue exercise of that power by the Lords, and to secure to the Commons their rightful control over taxation and supply, this House has in its own hands, the power so to impose and remit taxes, and to frame bills of supply, that the right of the Commons as to the matter, manner, measure, and tune, may be maintained inviolate"

The aim of these resolutions was briefly this —to asset broadly the constitutional rights of the Commons. to qualify former admissions, by declaring their jealousy of the power execused by the Lords, of rejecting bills is elating to taxation, and to convey a warning that the Commons had the means of resisting that power, if unduly execused, and were propared to use them They were a protest against future encoachmonts not a remonstrance on the past. The resolutions, though exposed to severe criticism, as not sufficiently undicating the privileges of the House, or condemning the recent conduct of the Lords, were yet accepted,—if may be said, unanimously 1 The soundest friends of the House of Lords, and of constitutional government, hoped that a course so temperate and conculatory, might prevent future differences of the same kind Should their hope be falsified, the Commons, having shown an example of fotbeau ance,—which might have been vamily sought, in an assembly less conscious of its strength,—may be provoked to exercise their unquestionable powers. Having gained moral force, by their previous moderation, they would not appeal in vain for popular support,—and who can doubt the result?

Debates, July 5th and 6th, clix 1383, Report of Committee 1860, Hansaid's Deb, 3id Sei, on Tax Bills, June 29th, 1860

One of the proud results of our free constitution has been the development of Parliamentary oratory,—an honour and onament to our history,—a source of public enlightenment,—and an effective instrument of popular government. Its excellence has vanied, like our hierature, with the genius of the men, and the events of the periods, which have called it forth, but from the accession of George III may be dated the Augustan en of Parliamentary eloquence

The great stuggles of the Panlament with Chailes I had stirred the eloquence of Pyun, Hampden, Wentworth, and Falkland the Revolution had developed the oratory of Someis, and the Panlaments of Anne, and the two first Georges, had given scope to the vanious talents of Bolingbioke, Pulteney, Wyndham, and Walpole The reputation of these men has reached posterity, but their speeches,—if they survived the memory of them own generations,—have come down to us in fragments,—as much the composition of the historian or reporter, as of the orators, to whom they are assigned 1 Happily the very period distinguished by our most eloquent statesmen was that in which they had the privilege of addressing posterity, as well as their own contemporaries. The expansion of their audience gave a new impulse to their eloquence, which was worthy of being preserved for all ages.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Of the speeches of Somers and rather recover a speech of Boling-Bolingbroke there are no remains broke than the lost books of Lavy, whatever M. Pitt saud he would on other writings of antiquity

Lord Chatham had attained the first place among Local statesmen in the late regn, but his fame as an orator family lests upon his later speeches,—in the leign of George III Lofty and impassioned in his style, and dramatic in his manner, his oratory abounded in grand dramatic in his manner, his oratory abounded in grand ideas and noble sentiments, expressed in language simple, bold, and vigorous. The finest examples of his eloquence stand alone, and univalled, but he flourished too early, to enjoy the privilege of transmitting the full fiture of his granus to recently.

finits of his genius to posterity!

He was surrounded and followed by a group of Mr. Pitt oratios, who have made their time the classic age of Pailiamentary history Foremost amongst them was his extraordinary son, Wilham Pitt. Inferior to his father in the highest qualities of an orator,—he surpassed him in argument, in knowledge,—in intellectual force, and mastery Magniloquent in his style, his oratory sometimes attained the elevation of eloquence, but arely rose above the level of debate. His composition was fehetously described by Windham, as a "State paper style." He may be called the founder of the modern school of Parlamentary debaters. His speeches were argumentative, admirably clear in statement, skilfully arranged, vigorous and practical. Always marked by rare ability, they yet lacked the higher inspirations of gemins. In surcism he had few equals

VOT. I

1 Some of his cashes speeches later speeches were delivated when were composed by Dr. Johnson from input fing was still very imperieut the notes of others, and even his

No one held so absolute a sway over the House of Commons In voice and manner, he was dignified and commanding The minister was declared in every word he utlered, and the consciousness of power, while it sustained the dignity of his oratory, increased its effect upon his audience

The eloquence of his great rival, Mr Fox, was as different, as were his political opinions and position His success was due to his natural genius, and to the great principles of liberty which he advocated Famihar with the best classical models, he vet too often disdained the studied art of the orator, and was negligent and unequal in his efforts But when his genius was aroused within him, he was matchless in demonstrative argument, in force, in wit, in animation, and spontaneous eloquence More than any orator of his time, he carried with him the feelings and conviction of his audience, and the spirit and reality of the man, charm us scarcely less in his printed speeches. Wanting in discretion, -he was frequently betrayed into intemperance of language and opinion, but his generous ardour in the cause of liberty still appeals to our sympathies, and his broad constitutional principles are lessons of political wisdom.

Mr. Fox had been from his eathest youth, the friend and disciple of M Burke, — and vast was the intellect of his master In genius, learning, and accomplishments, Mr Burke had no equal either among the statesmen. or writers of his time, yet he was inferior, as an orator to the three great men who have been already noticed. His speeches, like his writings, bear witness to his deep philosophy, his mexhaustible stores of knowledge, and redundant magmation. They are more studied, and more often quoted than the speeches of any other statesman. His metaphors and aphorisms are as familian to our ears, as those of Lord Bacon. But transcendent as were his grits, they were too often disfigured by extravagance. He knew not how to restrain them within the bounds of time and place, or to adapt them to the taste of a popular assembly, which loves directness and simplicity. His addresses were classer tations rather than speeches. To influence men, an orator must appeal directly to their reason, then feelings, and present tempor, but Mr Buike, while he astomished them with his produgious faculties, wearied them with refinements and imagery, in which they often lost the thread of his argument.

Mr Sheridan is entitled to the next place in this Mr Sherigroup of orators His brilliancy, and pointed wit, - dan his spirited declamation and effective delivery, - astonished and delighted his audience. Such was the effect of his celebrated speech on the fourth, or "Begum charge" against Wairen Hastings, that the peers and strangers joined with the House in a "tumult of applause," and could not be restrained from clapping their hands in ecstacy. The House adjourned, in order to recover its self-possession. Mr Pitt declared that this speech "sui passed all the eloquence of ancient or modern times, and possessed everything that genius or art could furnish, to agreate or control the human mind " Mr Fox said, "eloquent indeed it was, so much so, that all he had ever heard. - all he had ever read, dwindled into nothing, and vanished like vapour before the sun." Mr Sheridan afterwards addressed the Lords, in Westminster Hall, on the same charge, for four days, and Mr Burke said of his address, "that no species of oratory,-no kind of eloquence which had been heard m ancient or modern times, nothing which the acuteness of the bar, the dignity of the senate, or the morality of the pulpit could furnish, was equal to what they had that day heard in Westminster Hall" But while particular efforts of this accomplished speaker met with extraoidinary success, he was restrained by want of statesmanship and character, from commanding a position in the House of Commons, equal to his great talents as an orator 1

The qualities of Mr Windham were of another class Superior to the last in education and attainments, and bitle inferior in wit, he never achieved successes so dazzlng, yet he maintained a higher place among the debaters of his age Though his pretensions to the higher qualities of a statesman were inconsiderable, his numerous talents and virtues graced a long and distinguished public life

Lord Erskine was not inferior, as an orator, to the greatest of his contemporaries, but the senate was not the scene of his most remarkable triumphs speeches at the bar combined the highest characteristics of eloquence, fire, force, courage, earnestness, the closest argument,-imagery,-noble sentiments,great truths finely conceived and applied,-a diction pure and simple, action the most graceful and dignified. But none of these great qualities were used for display They were all held, by the severity of his taste, and the master v of his logic, in due subordination to the single design of persuading and convincing his audience The natural graces of his person completed only too good for a farce), and the best addices (the monologue on Garnek), and to crown all, delivered the very best oration, the famous He has written the best comedy, Begum speech, ever conceived or the best opera, the best farce (it is heard in this country"

<sup>1</sup> Lord Byron said of him "Whatever Sheridan has done, or chosen to do, has been, pm excellence, always the best of its kind

the orator Lord Brougham has finely pourtraved "that noble figure, every look of whose countenance is expressive, every motion of whose form graceful, an eye that sparkles and pierces, and almost assures victory, while it 'speaks audience ere the tongue'"

Had his triumphs been as signal in the senate, he would have been the first orator of his age. In that arena there were men greater than himself, but he was admitted to an emment place amongst them He fought for many years, side by side, with Mr Fox, and his 1 are gifts were ever exerted in the cause of ficedom

To complete the glittering assemblage of orators Other great who adorned the age of Chatham and of Pitt, many remarkable figures yet stand in the foreground We are struck with the happy wit and resources of Lord North, - the finished precision of Wedderburn, - the rude force of Thurlow,—the refinement and dignity of Lord Mansfield, - the constitutional wisdom of Lord Camden,-the logical subtlety of Dunning,-the severe reason of Sir William Grant, - the impassioned gentleness of Wilberforce,—and the statesmanlike vigour of

Lord Grenville

The succession of orators has still been maintained, Mr Grat-Some of Mr. Pitt's contemporaries continued to flourish tan many years after he had passed from the scene of his glory, and others were but commencing their career, when his own was drawing to its close. He lived to hear the eloquence of Mr Grattan, which had long been the pude of his own country It was rich in imagination, in vehemence, in metaphor, and pointed epigiam Though a stranger to the British Parliament, his genius and patriotism at once commanded a position, scarcely less distinguished than that which he had won in the Parliament of Ireland Englishmen, familiar with the

113

cloquence of then own countrymen, haded his accession to their ranks, as one of the most auspicious results of the Umon

Mr Canning's builtant talents, which had been matured under Mr Pitt, shone forth in full splendour, after the death of that statesman. In wit and sai casim, in elegant scholarship, in lively fancy, and in the graces of a finished composition, he was unrivalled His imageity,—if less original than that of Chatham, Burke and Eiskine,—was wrought up with consumnate skull, and expressed in language of exitaoidmany beauty For more than twenty years, he was the most successful and accomplished debater in the House of Commons,—delghting his friends with his dazling wit,—and confounding his opponents with inexhaustible repartice.

Earl Grey had also risen to distinction in the days of Mr Pitt, but the memorable achievements of his riper age, associate him with a later generation. In dignity and high purpose,—in earnest gravity of argument and exposition, he was the vcry model of a statesiman. His coratory bespoke his inflexible virtues, and consistency While his proud bearing would have pronounced him the leader of an aristocacy, and the mouthpiece of his order,—he devoted a long life to the service of the people.

Lord Eldon exercised so important an influence upon political affairs, that he cannot be omitted from this group of orators, though his claims to oratory alone, would not have entitled him to a place amongst them From the time when he had been Mr Pitt's Solicitori-General, until he left the woolsack,—a period of nearly forty years,—his high offices gave authority to his parhamentary efforts For twenty years he led captive the judgment of the House of Lords. but assuedly

neither by eloquence, nor argument in debate Tears and appeals to his conscience were his only eloquence,a dread of innovation his only argument. Even upon legal questions, the legislature obtained little light from his discourses The main service which posterity can derive from his speeches, is to note how recently prejudice and errors were maintained in high places, and how trivial the reasons urged in their defence

Lord Plunket, like his gleat countryman, Mr Glattan, Lord had gained a high reputation for eloquence in the Parhament of Ireland, which he not only sustained, but advanced in the British House of Commons He had risen to eminence at the bar of Ireland, where his style of speaking is said to have resembled that of Eisknie In debate, - if displaying less originality and genius than Mr Grattan, and less brilliancy than Mr Canning, -he was as powerful in sustained argument, as felicutous in illustration, and as forcible and pointed in language, as any orator of his time

Su Robert Peel was a striking counterpart of Mi Sir Robert Pitt. At first his extraordinary abilities in debate had Peel been outshone by the dazzling lustic of Mr Canning, and subdued by the fiery vehemence of Mr. Brougham, but his great powers, always improving and expanding, could not fail to be acknowledged. His oratory, like that of Mr Pitt, was the perfection of debate He rarely aspued to eloquence, but m effective declamation,-in close argument, - in lapid appleciation of the points to be assailed or defended, - in dexterity, - in tact,and in official and Parhamentary knowledge, he excelled every debater of his time Even when his talents were exercised in maintaining the political errors of his age and party, it is impossible not to admire the consummate skill with which he defended his untenable positions, against assailants who had truth on their side Arguments which provoke a smile, when we read them in the words of Lord Eddon, suprise us with their force and semblance of truth, when urged by Sir Robert Peel

The oratory of a man so great as the Duke of Welhngton, was the least of all of his claims to renown First in war, in diplomacy, and in the councils of his sovereign, -his speeches in Parliament were but the natural expression of his experience, opinions and purposes His mind being clear,-his views practical and sagacious,—and his objects singularly direct,—his speaking was plain, and to the point Without fluency or art, and without skill in argument, he spoke out what his strong sense and judgment prompted. He addressed an audience, whom there was no need to convince. They hung upon his words, and waited upon his opmions, and followed as he led The reasons of such a man were often weighty, but they were reasons which had determined his own course, and might justify it to others, rather than arguments to prove it right, or to combat opponents

The House of Commons was not the field for the best examples of Mi O'Connell's outory He stood there at a disadvantage,—with a cause to uphold which all but a small band of followers condemned as false and unpatriotic,—and with strong feelings against him, which his own conduct had provoked, yet even there, the massive powers of the man were not unfiequently displayed A perfect master of every form of argument,—potent in ridicule, sarcasm and invective,—rich in imagination and humour,—bold and impassioned, or gentle, persuasive and pathetic,—he combined all the powers of a consummate orator

His language was simple and forcible, as became his thoughts 1, his voice extraordinary for compass and flexibility But his great powers were disfigured by coarseness, by violence, by cunning, and audacious heense At the bar, and on the platform, he exhibited the greatest, but the most opposite endowments When he had thrown open the doors of the legislature to himself and his Roman Catholic brethien, the great work of his life was done, vet he wanted nothing but the moral influence of a good cause, and honest patriotism, to have taken one of the highest places in the senate

His countryman, Mr Sheil, displayed powers singu- Mr Sheil. larly unlike those of his great master. He was an orator of extraordmary bulhancy,-magmative, witty, and engrammatic. Many parts of his speeches were exquisite compositions,-clothing his fancy, in the aitistic language of the poet Such passages may be compared with many similar examples, in the speeches of Mr He was equally happy in antithesis, and Canning · enigram He excelled, indeed, in the ait and graces of oratorical composition. But his thoughts were wanting in depth and reality his maimer was extravagant in its vehemence, his action melodiamatic, and his voice, always shull, was raised in his impassioned efforts, to a harsh and discordant shirek

This second group of contemporary orators would other be incomplete, without some other striking characters entempewho played then part amongst them We would point orutors to the classical elegance of Lord Wellesley,-the readiness and dextenty of Perceval, - the high bearing and courage of Lord Castlereagh,-the practical vigour of

<sup>1</sup> It was happily said of him by of lusty thoughts, without a lag to Mi Sheil, "He brings forth a brood cover them"

Tierney.—the severe vutues, and high intellect of Romilly, - the learned philosophy of Francis Hoiner, the didactic fulness of Mackintosh,-the fruitful science of Huskisson, - the lucid argument of Follet, and the brilliant declamation of Macaulay

All these have passed away, but there are orators still living, who have contended in the same debates. and have won an equal fame Their portraiture will adorn future histories, but who is there that will not at once fill up this picture of the past, with the transparent clearness, and masterly force of Lord Lyndhurst. and the matchless powers and accomplishments of Lord Brougham 9

Progressive excellence in so divine an art as oratory. is no more to be achieved than in poetry or painting,in sculpture or architecture Genius is of all ages. But if orators of our own time have been unable to excel their great models, a candid criticism will scarcely assign them an inferior place. Then style has changed, - as the conditions under which they speak, are altered, They address themselves more to the reason, and less to the imagination, the feelings and the passions of their audience, than the orators of a former age They confront, not only the members of their own body, but the whole people, -- who are rather to be convinced by argument, than persuaded by the fascination of the orator In their language, there is less of study and artistic finish, than in the oratory of an earlier period. Their perorations are not composed, after frequent recitals of Demosthenes1; but give direct

1 "I composed the percration of succeeded in a very extraordinary my speech for the Queen, in the degree, and fa above any ments Loids, after reading and repeating of its own "—Lord Brougham to Demosthenes for three or four Zechary Macaulay, as advice to his reader and Lord Properties." Demosthenes for three or four Zachary Macaulay, as advice to his weeks, and I composed it twenty eclebrated son, March 10th, 1823 times over at least, and it certainly and forcible expression to their own opinions and senti-Their speaking is suited to the subjects of debate,—to the stir and pressure of public affans, - and to the taste and temper of their audience The first principles of government are no longer in dispute the liberties of the people are safe the oppression of the law is unknown Accordingly, the councils of the state encourage elevated reason, rather than unpassioned oratory Every age has its own type of excellence, and if the Nestors of our own time msist upon the degeneracy of living orators, perhaps a more cultivated taste may now condemn as rant. some passages from the speeches of Burke and Chatham. which their contemporaries accepted as eloquence

But whatever may be the claims of different genenations, to the highest examples of oratory, the men of our own age have advanced in political knowledge, and statesmanship, and then deliberations have produced results more beneficial to the people They have also unproved in temper and moderation In the earlier years of George III, party spirit and personal animosities,-not yet restrained by the courtesies of private society, or refined by good taste,-too often gave use to scenes discreditable to the British senate debates were as coarse and scurrilous as the press

In these excesses, Lord Chatham was both sinned Conisc poiagainst, and sinning In the debate upon the Indemnity of former Bill in 1766, the Duke of Richmond "hoped the nobility times would not be browbeaten by an insolent minister "1a speech which Horace Walpole alleges to have driven the Earl from the House of Lords, during the remainder of his unfortunate administration 2 Some years later. we find Lord Chatham himself using language repug-

&lt;sup>1</sup> Dec 10th, 1766

<sup>2</sup> Walpole's Mem , n 410, 411

nant to order, and decency of debate On the 1st February, 1775, he thus addressed the ministers — "Who can wonder that you should put a negative upon any measure which must annihilate your power, deprive you of your emoluments, and at once reduce you to that state of insignificance, for which God and nature designed you "1 A few days later, the House of Lords became the scene of personalities still more disorderly Lord Shelburne having insinuated that Lord Mansfield had been concerned in drawing up the bills of the previous session relating to America, Lord Mansfield rising in a passion, "charged the last noble Lord with uttering the most gross falsehoods," and said that "the charge was as unjust, as it was maliciously and indecently urged" In the same debate Lord Lyttelton imputed to Lord Camden "professional subtlety and low cunning"2 Agam on the 5th December, 1777, we find Lord Chatham accusing Earl Gower of "petulance and malignant misiepiesentation "8

No man so often outraged propuety and good tuste as Edmund Burke His excessive love of imagery and illustration, often displayed itself in the grossest forms Who is not familiar with his coarse portrait of Lord Noith, "extending his right leg a full yard before his left, rolling his flaming eyes, and moving his ponderous frame?" or with the offensive indecency, with which he likened Lord Noith's ministry to a party of courtessus? *

tesans?*
We find Colonel Barré denouncing the conduct of Lord North as "most indecent and scandalous," and Lord North complaining of this language as "extremely uncivil, brutal, and insolent," until he was called to order, and obliged to apologise 1 We find Mr Fox threatening that Lord North's ministry should expiate their crimes on the scaffold, and insinuating that they were in the pay of France 2 Nay, transgressing the bounds of political discussion, and assailing private character, he went so far as to declare that he should consider it unsafe to be alone with Lord North, in a 100m 8, and would not believe his word 4 Even of the king, he spoke with indecolous violence 5

There have since been altercations of equal bitter- Ruer outness The deepest wounds which sarcasm and invective decorum could inflict, have been unsparingly dealt to political in recent opponents Combatants "have sharpened their tongues like a serpent, adder's poison is under their lips" But good taste and a stricter order in debate, have restrained the grosser outrages to decency The weapons of debate have been as keen and trenchant as ever, but they have been wielded according to the laws of a more civilised warfare The first years of the Reformed Parliament threatened the revival of scenes as violent and disorderly as any in the last century 6, but as the host of new members became disciplined by experience, and the fierce passions of that period subsided, the accustomed decorum of the House of Commons was restored

Indeed, as the Commons have advanced in power Increased and freedom, they have shown greater self-restraint, and of the

Feb 22nd, 1852, Parl Hist, 6th Feb, 1834 — Hausen & Deb, 8th 1050
 Srd Ser, xu 140
 Mr Rigby Wason and Loid Sandon, 12th 4 Loid Blougham's Life of Lord Mach, 1854 — Hold, xu 110
 M. Monsayne and Mr. O'Connell, Mr. Schonyne and Mr. O'Connell, xn 1050 North , Works, m 56 4 20th March, 1782, Parl Hist, xxn 1216 Wravall's Mem , n 255—258

<sup>6</sup> M: Sheil and Lord Althorp,

All Homeyne and All O'Comell, 6th May, 1834 — Ibid, xxm 624 Mi Hume and Mi Chalton, 3rd June, 1835 — Ibid, xxm 485. 22nd July, 1835 — Ibid, 879.

a more teady obechence to the authority of the Speaker They have always been more orderly in their proceedings than the Loids, and the contrast which the scenes of the flist twenty years of George III present to those of late times, can scarcely fail to strike an attentive student of Palhamentary history

What would now be thought of such scenes as those enacted in the time of Sir John Cust, Sir Fletchei Norton, and Mr Counwall,—of rebukes and interruptions',—of unseemly altercations with the Chair,—of the words of the Speaker himself being taken down,—and of a motion that they were disorderly and dangerous to the freedom of debate?

In concluding this sketch of Parliamentary oratory, a few words may be added concerning the general standard of debate in the House of Commons If that standard be measured by the excellence of the best speakers at different periods, we have no cause to be ashamed of the age in which our living orators and statesmen have flourished But judged by another test, this age has been exposed to disparaging criticisms When few save the ablest men contended in debate. and the rank and file were content to cheer and vote, a certain elevation of thought and language was, perhaps, more generally sustained But, of late years, independent members,-active, informed, and businesslike,-representing large interests,-more responsible to constituents, and less devoted to party chiefs,living in the public eve, and ambitious of distinction.-

&lt;sup>1</sup> Somes between Mi. Righy and Somes with Sir Fletchen Notion the Spanke, Sir John Oust, in 1762 Dec. 14th, 1770 — Ind. in 1008 — Circulata Deb., in 343 And bed March 12th and 27th, 1771 — Ind. in some Speaker, March 18th, 1769— in 180, 470 — in 180,

have eagerly pressed forward, and claimed a hearing Excellence in debate has suffered from the multiplied demands of public affairs Yet in speeches without pretensions to oratory, are found strong common sense, practical knowledge, and an honesty of purpose that was wanting in the silent legions of former times The debates mark the activity, and earnest spirit of a representative assembly. At all times there have been some speakers of a lower grade,-without instruction, taste, or elevation Formerly their common-place effusions were not reported now they are freely read, and scornfully criticised They are put to shame by the writers of the daily press, who discuss the same subjects with superior knowledge and ability Falling below the educated mind of the country, they bring discredit upon the House of Commons, while they impair its legislative efficiency But worse evils than these have been overcome, and we may hope to see this abuse of free discussion eventually corrected, by a less tolerant endurance on the part of the House, and by public reprobation and contempt

INDEX TO VOL. I.

Abrrooms, Eurl of, his nights as peer of theat Britain and of Scotland, 239 Abertomby, Mr., his motion on Scotch representation, 298

Aberdeen, Earl of, the Reform Bill of his manistry, 377 A Count, Colonel, deprived of command for

A Court, Colones, deputyed of command to votes in parliament, 24

Addimgton, Mr., mechates between Geo III und Pitt on the Catholes quaston, 80, 81, forms an admunistration, 81, official difficulties caused by the King's illness at this juncture, 183—165, has relations with the King, 24, resigns office, 83, leads the "King's funds," 84, takes office under P.-J., 6, all. mig. competency for business, 167, permits delate on notice of motion, 384, n. See Solimonth, on the other control of the control of t

Viscount
Addresses to the crown, from purbament, respecting peace and was, or the dissolution of purlament, 468, 469, 460, not be sopple, for a dissolution, 460, Load Camden's opinion, 461, this right arniuncl by vote of the Commons, to Adminuity Court, judge of, disqualified from penhament, 311 Althorp, Loid, the Melbouino ministry dismissed, on his removal from the Commons, 121

American colonics, the war with, stopped by the Commons, 48, 458
Anne, Queen, land rovenues at her secession,

192, their alienation restrained, ib, her civil list and debts, 194, not cases of poorage, during her reign, 229, created twelve peers in one day, ib, holdows of offices disqualified by Art of Settlement, 308, popular addresses to, maying a dissolution, 461

Appellate jurisdiction of the House of Loads' bill, 249

Appropriation of grants by pail ment, resolution against issue of unappropriated monoy, 61, commencement of the system, 469, misappropriation of grunts by Chis II, 194

Areot, Nabob of represented in parliament by several members, 330 Army and Navy Service Bill opposed by

Geo III, 87, withdrawn, 89

Assass, commission for holding, assaed during Geo III's in operaty, 157

Bakin, Mr., his motion against Geo III's

Bellot, vote by, motions for adoption of, 316, 371

Baronetage, past and present numbers of.

269
Bané, Colonel, deprived of command for votes in parliament, 24, lesigns his commission, 40, passed over in a hieret, ab

"Bedchamber Question, the," 128
Bedford, Duke ot, remonstrates against Lord

Bute's influence, 28
Beskeley, Mr. H, has motions for the ballet,

Bushops, then number in the Howe, 249, attempts to exclude thou, 250, the pot temperature position, 252, then vot super the Rotein Bill, 258, 259, Lish representative bushops, 234 Silvadford, Manquess of, his schemes of reform, 342 Bohnglooke, Lord, his theory of "a patriot king, 10 different rights of election in, 276, 295, nomination botonglis, 271, 276, 295, nomination botonglis, 271, 276, 295, 299, 300, numbers of votes in, 276, 295, 300, seats for, longitt or rented, 280, 287, advantaged for sale, 280, prices of, 281, 282, 286, 287, 305, law passed against the sale of bounging, 287, 295

verument boroughs, 288
"Berough-brokers," 282
Boyer, 1-ports debutes in parliament, 415
Brand, Mr., his motion against the pledge required of the Greenville ministry, 90 Behley at elections, prior to pulmamentary reform, 277, commenced in roga of Chriler II, 16, supported by George, III, 284, 286, acts to restam, 277, 280, 281, 387, lishery since the Riesun Act, 369, latri bribery acts, 362—365, proof of spency, 362, mguny by commission, 263, gross cases, 361, tarvelling excesses, 365, polery of legislation, 366

Brihery of mombers of parlament See Members of the House of Commons Brougham, Lord, his motion against influence of the crown, 112, opinion on life peci ggs, 245, advises, as chancellos, the pectuges, 245, advises, as chancellot, the creation of new peets, 259, his motion for reform, 319, on the dination of purlament, 368 Buckinghum, Marquess of, refuses to trussmut the Lush address to the Pimee of Wales, 162 Bundett, Su F, his schemes of icform, 337, 338, commutted for contempt, 435, iesists the warrant, 449, apprehended by torco, to, brings actions for rechess, 450 Burg age tomme, franchise, 275 Burke, Mr., his scheme of economic roform,

Jurke, all, his schome of economic rotum, il, 200, 215, drew up the punce's reply to Pitt's scheme of a regency, 163, his jacosal for sale of cown lands, 212, for icitation of pension hat, 215, opposes pain uncatany retorm, 325, his ideal of representation, 383, opposes Wilker's expulsion, 394, his irem take in pledges to constituents, 441, character of his oratory, 482, 402

Bute, county, ibsuid case of election for,

Date, Ball of, he unconstitutional institutions to George III, 9, sads he pressonal decides the constitution of the constitution of the pressonal decides the constitution of the conclust, 16 20 and pathamatany bubert, 314, 317, has fall, 21, secret untinence over the King, 22, 27, 29, retries from court, 24

CABINET, the, admission of a judge to seat in, 86, all the offices in, held by the Duke of Wellington, 123, the interior chinet of George III, 11

Caleratt, Mr, deprived of office for opposition to court policy, 25

Camden, Lord, disapproves the Middlesex electron proceedings, 398, 404, defends his conduct in the cabinet, 401, opinion on popular addresses to the crown, 461 Campbell, Lord, his opinion on life posrages, 216

Canning, Mr, his conduct feganding the Cathohe question, 80, 93, 113, in office under Mr Penceval, 92, overtures to from the court, 104, declines to suppor George IV agunst his Queen, 108,111, n christer of his quatory, 486

Caulton House, the cost of, 210 Caumuthen, Marquess of, proscribed for opposition to court policy, 46 Cuoline, Quicu (of George IV), morred ings against, 107—111, the Divoice Bill

109, withdrawn, 110
Cutholic Emancipation, opposition to, by

Cutonic Emancipation, opposition to, by George III, 78, 89, by George IV, 113 measure carried, 115, a plea for pulsa montary reform, 342 Civondish, Loid J, his motion on the American war, 48 Cavendish Su H, reports the Commons

debrites (1768—1774), 410, n Chancellos, Lord See Great Seal, the

Charles I, alienates the crown lands, 190 Charles II, crown revenue's recovered a accession of 190, subsequent wate, 191 appropriates army grants, 191, buber;
at elections, and of members, communed
under, 277, 280, 312

Charlotte, Pinneess, question is to guindanship over, 227 Charlotte, Queeu (of George III), accepts the resolutions for a regoncy, 165, 178

Chatham, Bail of m office is accessor. Grouge III, 11, testus and accepta peer, ago, 17, vedesas to revenue office, 26, 37 has dimensioned as a countrie, 36, fermi via up partices, 46, 11h health, 36, vettres 7, sistements is to the King's influence 38, textuses overtime 6 non Lexil North 14, approved the fix multiple Add, 304 favours treatmal pich uncent, 388, but proposition to the proceedings against Wilder, 387, 398, by bull, 409, by an objective, 361, and by addresser to discharge, 461, and by addresser to discharge, 461, and by addresser to discharge 461, attack and by addresser to the capture of the fixed forms the Kingfe subserve to the capture of the fixed forms the Kingfe subserve to the capture of the fixed forms the Kingfe subserve to the capture.

addhesses to the crown, 461, his opinion on the excharge rights of the Common over transloon, 473, position as an orator 481, 491 Chippenham election potition, Walpole displaced from office by vote upon, 303

his speeches, 408, 410, supports popular

Cril list of the crown, 194, settlement of, on accession of George III., 186, changes and peursons thereon, 197, 214–218, debts memored mon, 194, 203, changes removed from, 204, 205, Civil List. Acts, 1782, 202, 1816, 204, segulation of the cril ist, 204, 206. Commons committee on, 205, no debts upon, during the last three reigns, 206 See also Pensions from the Crown

Clerke, Sir P J, his Contractors' Bill, 322 Coultion Ministry, the formation of, 53, its policy, 55, overthrown, 60 Cockburn, Lord, his description of Scotch

Cockburn, Lord, his dese elections, 296

Coke, Lady Mary, admired by the Duke of York, 220 Coke, Lord, an anthority for life pecages,

244
Coke, M1, moves a resolution hostile to the

Put ministry, 66
Commission, for opening pathament during incapacity of George III, questions unsupport the purpose of George III.

incapacity of George III., questions arising thereupon, 166, 150, 178, form of such commission, 178, his in bility to sign commissions for prologation, 173, the commission for holding assizes, 167 Commissions to inquire into bribery at elections, 363

Commons. House of, unconstitutional infinonce of the crown over the, by undue mfluence and intimidation, 3, 20, 24, 31, 39, 63, 88, by infinence at elections, 288, by places, pensions, and bribes, 306 -323, debates thereon, 41-47, 58, 59, 112, their contest with Pitt's first ministry, 61-70, resolutions against a dissolution, 62, 63, 460, against the issue of money unappropriated by parliament, 64, against the icerat changes in the ministry 65, lesolutions to be laid before Gee III, 66, 1 colution against interference by the Loids, 67, comments on this contest, 70-73, debates on the pledge required of the Grenville ministry, 90-93, action of the Commons as icgards a regency, 142-187, doubts respecting the issue of new writs during George III's incapacity, 147, elect a speaker during King's incapacity, 153, vote untherising use of great seal, 155, 166, 178, address on King's recovery, 168 10culation of erown revenues and civil hst, 194-205, 1elitions between the two houses, 255, as to reform, 256, as to tixation, 472, composition of the house since the revolution, 272, its dependence and corruption, sb , defects in the repre-sentation, 273 , ill-defined rights of election, 275, nomination beloughs, 274house, 277, 300, bribery at elections, 277, since reform, 359, at the general elections (1761), 279, (1768), 281, sale of hotoughs, 280-287, gross eases of bribery, 282, bribery supported by Gco III. 281, 286, government influence over horoughs, 288, revenue officers disfigurehised, th, majority of members no-minuted, 299, trial of election petitions, 301, by committee of privileges, 302, it the bar of the house, th , the Grenville Act, 303, corruption of members, 306-323, by places and ponsions, 306, measmes to disqualify placemen and pensioners, 307, number of, in parliament, 310, judges desqualified, 311, bribes to members, 312-317, under Lord Bute, 311, the shop at the pay-office, 315, apology for refusing a bribe, 316, bribes by louns and lotterns, 318-321, by contracts, 321, pullamentary corruption considered, 323-326, proceedings in Commons regarding reform, 327-375, efforts to repeal Septemmil Act, 367, vote by ballot, 371, quilification Acts, 373, proceedings at elections, 375, later measures of reform, to, relation of the Commons to Chown, law, and people, 385 -180, contests on questions of privilege, 385, proceedings against Wilkes, 386, deny him his privilege, ib , expel him, 389, repel his accusation of Lord Marsfield, 392, expcl him for libel on Lord Weymouth, 393, his 10-elections deel ucil void, 396, Luttiell souted by the house, 397, motions upon Middlesex election procerdings, 399, 405, address to the King condemning the city address, 402, the exclusion of strangers from debates, 407, 428, the exclusion of ladies, 429, n, the lords excluded from the Commons, 411, contest with the printers, 413, prohibit the publication of debates, 414, increased severity in 1771, $18, proceed against the city authorities for resisting the speaker's wurrant, 422-425, cause the messenger's recognisance, $23, report of debates permitted, 427, reporters' gallo-ries, 431, strangers' gulleries, ib., publiention of division lists, 432, prescues of strangers at divisions, 433, publicity given to committee proceedings, 1b, to parhamentary papers, 434, early prac-tico regarding petitions, 436, house influenced by the prescutation of petitions, 438, debates on, restrained, 413, pledge s by members, 444, discontinuance of pri-vileges, 446, to servants, 16, of prisoners kneeling, 447, privilege and the courts of law, 448-454, case of Sn F Buidett, 449, Stockdale and Howard's actions, 450, commit Stockdalo and his agents, 452, commit the shearffs, ab, night of Confinous to publish papers iffeeting character, 454, increased power of the Commons, 455, conduct of, 1eparding Journal disability, 456, control of the Commons over the sovernment, 457, over peace and war, and over dissolutions of parliament, 62, 458, 159, votes of want of confidence, 49, 65, 69, 462, and of confidence, 118, 353, 462, implachments, 463, relations between the Commons and ministers since the Reform Act. 126, 465, their control over national expenditure, 193, 468, liberality to the crown, 469, stopping the supplies, 171, supplies delayed, 61, 68, 472, reshaints upon the liberality of the house, 472 . exclusive rights over taxation, 473 power of the lords to reject a money bill. 474-480, sketch of parhamentary ora-tory, 480, conduct of the house in debate, 490, mueased authority of the chau, See also Lords, House of, Parha-ment, Petitions Commonwealth, destruction of crown re-

vonues at, 190 Contracts with Government a means of briling members, 321, contractors disqualified from parhament, 322 Conway, General, proscribed for votes in pathament, 24, 25, takes office under Lord Rockingham, 29, diselams the influence of the "King's friends," 30, his motion on the American war, 48 Conwall, Duchy of, revenues of inheritance of Prince of Wales, 207, present amount,

Conwall, Mi Speaker, death of, during Geo III's meapecity, 152 County elections, territorial influence over, 293, expenses of contest at, 294

Courts of law and parlamentary privilege, 448—465, decisions in Buidett's case, 460, in the Stockdale cases, 451—455 Crawford, Mr S, his motion as to duration of pathament, 369

Crewe, Mr., lus Rovenue Officers. Bill, 289
Cricklade, bribery st, 283, disfranchised, 46
Crosby, Brass, Lord Mayor, proceeded aguinst for committing the messengen of the house, 422—425 (covr.), the constitutional position of, smoothe evolution, i. poi amount authority by government househp. 288, ly places, poetagos, and possons, 198, 300, by grocemate househp. 288, ly places, pretagos, and possons, 198, 300, by prices, 312, by losses and lotterers, 318, pretagos, lambusto evolution, 190, personal influence over parisament, 5, 6, 127, 224, 465, measures for its diminution, by disqualification of placomen, por easy of the common every the grad-

hst expenditure, 192, 215, and over supplies, 468, constitutional relations between crown and ministers, 12, 89, 121, 128, 132, 464, influence of the grown over the government during Lord Bute's munstry, 19, Mr Crenville's, 24, Lord Rockingham's, 31, 51, Lord North's, 38, Lord Shelburne's, 52, "the coultion," 55, Mr Pitt's, 74, 77, Addington's, 82, Loud Grenville's, 85, Mr Perceval's, 98, 103 . influence of the crown doing reions of William IV and her Majesty, 115 138, debates upon the unconstitutional influence of the grown over purhament. 33. 43-17, 58, 65, 112, violation of pathamentary privileges by the crown, 20, 24, 31, 39, 46, 63, bribery at elections, and of members supported by the crown, 284, 286, 317, influence of the crown exerted against its ministers, 31. 56, 76, 88, 114, the attatude of parties a proof of the paramount influence of the crown, 77, 103, 1ts influence exerted in favour of reform, 115, 119, was exertion of influence of clown in the present leigh, 135 . its general influence increased, 136 . parliament kept in harmony by influence of the crown, 256, the prerogatives of the crown in absyance, 139—187, the Regency Bills of George III, 140—178. of William IV, 183, of Queen Victoria, 187, powers of the crown exercised by parliament, 151, 155, 178, 180 . the Royal Sign Minual Bill, 180, questions as to accession of an infant king, 183, as to the rights of a posthumous child, 186, ancient revenues of the crown, 188, constitutional results of its improvidence. 192, parliamentary settlement of crown revenues, 193, the civil list, 194-206, private property of the crown, 208, provision for royal family, 15 , land revenues, 211, the pension hst, 214, rights of crown over the Royal Family, 219, over grandchildron, 220, 227, over 10yal marriages, 221, Royal Marriage Act, 10 question submitted to the judges, 223 ommon of law officers on marriage of Dake of Sussex, 226, attempt to limit the 11ghts of crown in creation of peers, 230 . numerous applications for pectages. 236, the grown receives the advice of parliament as to peace and war, concerning a dissolution, and the conduct of ministers, 458-462, appeals to the pcople, if dissatisfied with the judgment of parliament, 459, addressed by the people on the subject of a dissolution, 480, improved relations between the crown and commons, 465, 469, the refusal of sunphes, 64, 68, 471, its-recommendation required to motions for grant of public money, 472

Crown lands See Revenues of the Crown Cumberland, Duke of, conducts munistenial negotiations for the King, 27, 28, protests quants tesolutions for a regency linil, 151, his name omitted from the commission to open parlament, 156, marries Mrs Horton, 218

Curwen, Mr, his Act to restrain the sale of boroughs, 287 Cust, Su John, chosen speaker, 16, alter-

entions with, 494 Customs and excise officers disfrunchised, 289, numbers of, 16

DANDY, Earl, his case cited with reference to ministerial responsibility, 96

Debates a parlament, publication of prolimet, 433, 443, sanctioned by the Long Parlament, 444, early publications of debtes, 40, almost of reporting, 416, and the state of the control of the company of the control of the company of the control of the company of the company of the control of

Denman, Lord, his decision in Stockdale v Hansurd, 451

Dering, Sir E , expelled for publishing his speeches, 414

Derby, Earl of, the reform bill of his ministry, 378, bill lost, 380, ministry defeated on the house tax, 471

D'Este, Su A , his claim to dukedom of Sussex, 226 Dovonshue, Duke of, disgraced for opposition to the treaty with France, 20, resigns his lord-heutenancy, 16 Disrueli, Mi., brings in a reform bill, 378

Dissolutions of pathament See Addresses to the Crown, Parhament Divisions, lists of, published, in the Commons, 432, in the Lords, 433, presence of strangers at, 10 Dowdeswell, Mr., opposes the expulsion of

Wilkes, 394, 400
"Droit le Roi," burnt by order of the Loids,

Diois of the Crown and Admiralty, the, vested in the crown till accession of Wilham IV, 196, 206

Dundas, Mr., his amendment to Mr Dunning's resolutions, 45 Dunning, Mi, his resolutions agreest influence of the crown, 44, denies the right to incapacitate Wilkes, 400 Dyson, Mr, his sobraquet, 419

Bast Retront, disfranchisement bill of, 344 Bbrington, Lord, his motions in support of reform ministry, 353, 355

Beonomic reform, Mr Binke's, 44, 200, 216 Edinburgh, dcfi clave representation of, 295, bill to imend it. 298

Eduard II, revenues of his crown, 189 Edward VI, his sign minual affixed by a stamp, 182 Effingham, Earl of, his motion condemning the commons' opposition to Mr Pitt, 66 Eldon, Lord, Geo III's suspected adviser against the Grenville ministry, 92, disliked by the Regent, 101, condoles with George IV on the Catholic emancipition, 114, scandalised when the crown supports reform, 116, diancellor to the Addington ministry, 165, his declaration as to Geo III's competency to the meant business, 168, obtains the loyal assent to bills, 16, his interview with the King, th, negoti ites Pitt's return to office, 170, his conduct impugued, 171, motions to omat his name from Council of Regency, sb, 172, his opinion as to accession of mfant king, 184, his position as statesman, 486

Election petitions, trial of, pilor to the Grenville Act, 301, under that Act, 303, 304, later election petition Acts, 306 Elections, expensive contests at, 277, 282,

Sections, expensive contests at, 277, 282, 294, vexatious contests, 291, Acts to amend election proceedings, 375, writes for, addressed to returning officers, if &e also Refarm of Parliament

Ellenbouough, Lord, his admission to the culunet, when Lord Chinef Justee, 8; Erskine, Lord, his motions against a dissolution, 69, 62, his speech on the pledge required from the Greaville numetry, 94, his support of r. from, 334, 338, 338, character of his outdary, 48

Establishment Bill, brought in by Burke, 201 Exchequer chamber, court of, toverse deeision in Howard v. Gosset, 465 Families, great, state influence of, 7, 291.

opposed by George III , 10, 35 , influence of, at the present day, 137 Fitzherbert, Mr. proscribed for opposition to count policy, 25 Erizhesburk, Mis, married the Prince of Wales, 225

Flood, Mi, his reform bill, 333

Four and a half per cent dates, the casual somices of a venue of the crown, 196, 205, changed with pensions, 211, 217, suitendered by William IV, 218

Bory Mr. C. J. Ish commits on Geoger III y visus of growmant, 49, 44, 17, 41, on lesses with Lord North, 64, the canthou numerly, 57, hange in the John Mill, 62, 70, powerful from office by the King, 83, onlunted to office, 80, dammed, 90, his deadlt shearset with Regent from the Wings, 100, he sender regarding the Wings, 100, he provided in the Wings, 100, he provided regarding the Wings, 100, promise on munethamid sporting, 128, erunings locked by 100, 425, postulas as they

Fox, Mr Hemy, Sir R Walpolt's agent in laibery, 314

F) mee, trenty of peace with, proscription of the Whigs for disapprovid of, 20, members bright of support, 316. Princhise the, of Fingland, 276, 293, of Scotland, 205, of Lettind, 299, under the Reform Act 356—357, proposed al-

the Reform Act, 355—357, proposed alterthous m, 375, fancy finnehises, 377, 379 See Reform in Pauli ment "Hirends of the Prople," society, statements by, as to composition of House of Commons, 276, 300

Fuller, Mr. R, bribed by pension from the grown, 308

GASOOYNE, General, his anti-reform motion,

Gatton, number of votors in, prior to 1eform, 276, price of, 305

G izetteer, the, complained against for pulllishing debutes, 418 Gentlem m's Magazine, the, one of the first to report parliamentary debates, 415 George I, his civil list, 195, powers he claimed over his grandchildien, 220, convents to Poeugo Bill, 230 George II, his Regency Act, 140, his civil hit, 195, the great scal affixed to two commessions during his illness, 155, his savings, 197

George III, accession of, 8, education, 9, determination to govern, 8—15, secret counsellors, 11, his realonsy of the Whig

counsellers, 11, his jealousy of the Whig families, 10, 16, his arbitrary conduct and viol then of parliamentary privileges dming Lord Butc's ministry, 19, 20. during Mr Grenville's ministry, 24, his deficiences with that ministry, 23, 26, 28 his active interference in the government 26, pledge not to be unfluenced by Lord Bute, 27, consents to dismiss Mi S Mackenzic, 28, the conditions of the Rockingham ministry, 29, excits his influence against them, 31, 33, attempts, with Chathum, to destroy parties, 34, his influence during Chatham's ministry, 36. 37 . trees to actam hum in office, 37, his ascendency in Lord North's time, 38, 42, 50, multition at opposition, 38, 41, exerts his will in favour of the Royal Mariage Bill, 39, takes notice of proceedings in parli ment, it, proscribes officers in opposition, 40, his overtures to the Whigs, 42, 43, his personal interference in parliament protested against, 43-47, 58, seeks to jutimid ite opposition peers, 46, defeat of his Amouern policy, 48, 49, approval of Loid North's con-duct, 10, results of the King's policy, 50 . the Rockingham ministry, 51, measures to temess his influence, 52-55. 289, 308, 311, he reasserts it with Lord Shellsune, 52, resists the "coalition 51-60, negotiates with Pitt, 54, 55 uso of his name against the India Bill, 57, supports Pitt igninst the commons, 68-70, his position during this con-test, 70-72, its effect upon his policy, 73 , his relations with Pitt, 74 , his gene-1al influence angmented, 75, propared to use it against Pitt. 76, dismisses him. 78. opposition to the Catholic question. 78-81, illness from agitation on this subject, 82, his relations with Addington. 82, 163, refuses to admit Fox to office, 83, Pitt reinstited, 84, admits Lord Grenville to office, 86, opposes changes in army administration, 87, and the Army and Navy Service Bill 10, unconstitutional use of his influence, 88, pledge he required of his ministers, 89, his anti-Catholic appeal on the dissolution (1807), 97, his influence prior to his last illness, 98, his character compared to that of the Prince Regent. 99, the Kma's illnesses, 139-180, the first illness, 139, his scheme for a regency, 140, modified by ministers, 141, speech, and addresses on this subject, 142; consents to the withdrawal of his mother's name from Rogency Bill, 144, second illness, 146, recovery, 158, anxious to provide for a regency, 163, third illness, in the interval between the Pitt and Addungton ministries, 163, 164, recovery,

165, fourth illness, 166, questions aris ing as to his competency to trans ict be aness, 167-172, gives assent to bills, 168, meedote of his reading the bills, 169, Pitt's return to office, 170, then interview, ib , his last illness, 172 , the passing the Regenev Bill, 173-178, his in thility to sign commussions for protogration, 173, difficulties as to issue of public money, 179, his civil list, 195, other somees of revenue, 197, purchases Buckingham House, 16, domestic economy, 198, debts on civil list, 198-203, Sir F Norton's address, 200, profusion in the household, 201, his message on public expenditure, 202, his pension list, 215, his annoyance at his brothers' manages, 219, has attachment to Lady S Lennox 220, the Roy il M manage Act, 220, 221, claims guardianship of Princess Charlotte, 227, profuse in creation of pecis, 231-233, supports bubery at elections, and of members, 284, 286, 317, his opposition to reform, 76, 331, his answer to the city address on the pro-ceedings against Wilkes, 102, objects to political agitation by petitions, 410

George IV ascendoney of the Toy ynty under, 107, the proceedings against his Queen, m, his version to Lord Grey and the Wings, 111, his popularity, 112, his opposition to Catholic claims, 113, yields, ind exerts his influence against his munisters, 114, authorised to affix his sign manual by a stump, 180, his civil hast and other revenines, 201

Genmune, Lord G, his statement respecting Geo IIL's personal influence, 42 Glasgow, defective representation of, 295

Gloucester, bribery at, 364 Gloucestor, Duke of, marines Lady Waldegrave, 219

Gordon, Lord G , presents petitions to parhament, 439 Gosset, Sn W , sued by Howard for tres-

Government, executive, control of panhament over, 457, strong and weak governments since the Reform Act, 485 See also Ministers of the Crown Gower, Earl of, his amendment to resolutions for a regency, 177

tuns for largency, 112
[affont, Duke of, dismussed from lot d-heutenancy for opposing the court policy, 20, accepts office under Lord Chutham, 24, complians of the bad results of Chatham's ill-health, 36, consequent weakness of the ministry, 37, resigns, 49, his ministry broken up by debates upon Wilkes, 400

Grunpound de Alanebasement bille, 229, 340 first tim, Mr., chan acte of his orders, 185 first seed, the, acc of, maler authority of pulmanent, during Goo III 's almess, 155 —167, 178, questions arising the rupon, 169, tilixed by Loid Hudwicks to two commissions during filmess of George II.

155 Grenville Act, trial of election petitions ander, 303, made percental, 305

muct, 362, in the payerint, 360)

(Genrille, Land, in other with its indust, 185, diffical with the King for view; 465, diffical with the King for view; 466, diffical with the King for view; 466, diffical with the King for white the chance in the Chiboleon-strong Body pledge required by the King on that subject, 67, the kings expect, 101, attempted (consistence, 102, finalize of neglections on the company of the Regent, 101, attempted (consistence, 102, finalize of neglections on the company of the Regent, 101, attempted (consistence, 102, finalize of neglections on the company public money change (consistence).

Grantlo, M. Goorge, sate data, factorial parallel for forcing single data for forcing single data for forcing single data, for forcing single data forcing single s 477.

Gray, Eaal, las stree neglected by the Begent, 101, out of cout favour, 107, dechaes often on the "Household Quatons," 103, subrouties stelons, and leavtons, "103, subrouties stelons, and leavtons," 103, subrouties stelons, and leavton," 103, subrouties stelons, and

838, 439, leav- the to confidence of Wolfam

IV, 110, accuses Lord Edden et using

George III's a nine without dan artilo rity 183, 171, segul timo of the sirable by has manufary, 306, adress the con tion of face pecus, 206, 204, 52, faround;

chanaged of law outor, 488

chanaged of law outor, 488

chanaged of law outor, 488

Grey, Mr (1667), reports the debates, 411 Grosvenor, General, his hostile motion against Mr Pitt's nametry, 66

Grove, Mr., advocates vote by ballot, 373 Hatifax, Lord, obtains consent of Geo III to exclude his mother from the Regency, 144 Humilton, Duke of, a Scottish Peer, not allowed the nights of an English peer,

238 Hamilton, Lord A, advocates reform in Hanover, House of, character of the first two kings of, invourable to constitutional government, 6

Hinover, kingdom of, revenues, attached to the crown till her Majesty's accession, 197, 207 Hajisaud, Messes, sued by Stockdulo for libel, 450

Harcourt, Lord, supports the influence of Harcourt, Lord, supports the influence of the crown over purlament, d2 Hardwicke, Lord, affixed great seal to commissions during illness of George II , 155 Harrowby, Earl of supports George IV on Hartowby, Earl of, supports George IV on the Catholic question, 95 Hastings, Mr Warith, impeachments not abuted by dissolution established in his case, 464 Hastings, sale of borough seat, 287 Hawkesbury, Lord, supposed adviser of

Geo III against the Gronville ministry, 92, his declination as to King's competency to transact business, 168

Hoberden, Dr., his evidence regarding the King's illnesses, 171 Henley, Mr., secedes from the Derby ministry on question of reform, 380 Henry III, V, VI, and VII, revenues of their growns, 189, 190

Henry VIII, his sign-minual affixed by a stamp, 181, his crown revenues, 190 Herbert, Mr, his bill as to the expulsion of members, 401

Heron, Sn. R., ball for shortening direction of parhament, 368

Hindon, bubery at, 283 Hobbouse, Mr., committed for contempt,

Holdornesse, Lord, retires from office in fivour of Lord Bute, 16 Holland, Lord, amendment for an address to Prince of Wales, 176

Horner, Mr. F., his speech against a regency bill, 175

Household, the See Royal Household

House tax, Lord Derby's ministry defeated on, 471 Howard, Messrs, reprimaniled for conduct-ng Stockdale's ichon, 452, committed, 453, sue the seige-int-at-arms, 454 Howick, Loid, donounces secret advice to crown, 92, 93 for Grey, Rail Huskisson, Mr., his prophecy of reform in

IMPERCHMENT of ministers by parliament, 463, rare in later times, 16, not abated by a dissolution, 464

parliament, 345

India Bill, the, 1783, thrown out by influ-

Iteland, position of Church, causes alaim to William IV, 120, mimber of archbishops and bishops of, 231, representatrue bishops of ab -evil hat of 197. 205, pensions on crown revenues of, 214, 216, consolidated with English pension hst, 218 --- parhament of then proceedings on the legency, 162, addiess the Prince, sb , office-holders disqualified in. 310 -the representative peers of, 239, restriction upon number of the Lish peerage, sb , absorption of, into peerage of United Kingdom, 241, Irish peers sit in the commons, 231 --- representation of, prior to Reform Bill, 298, 300, nomination beloughs abolished at the Union. 299, Irish judges disqualified, 311 -Reform Act of, 358, amended (1850), ale Linham, Lord, his daughter married to Duke of Cumberland, 219

James I, amount of his erown nevenues,

Jews, admission of, to pathament, 456 Johnson, Dr., the compiler of pulliamentary reports, 415, 416, 428, 481, n

Jones, Mr Galo, committed for libel on the House, 435 Judges, introduction of a judge into the cabnot, 86, disqualified from parliament, 311, except the Master of the Rolls, 312

Kent, Duchess of, appointed Regent (1880), 187
Kentish potationers imprisoned by the commons, 437

Kenyon, Loid, opinion on the colonation oath, 78
Kmg, Lord, moves to omit Loid Eldon's

mame from the council of against, 172 Emg. questions as to accession of an infiniking, 183, as to the rights of a king's postamous child, 186, inghts of a king's postamous child, 186, inghts of a king over the royal family, 219 Sc also Crown, the, George III, Regency, &c "King's Friends, the," the party so called, 11, their misenes, 30, led by Addington, 84, 86, 86, their activity on the Catholic question, 80, squaret the Army

Service Bill, 88, the "nibobs" lank themselves among, 280 Knighthood, the orders of, 269

Lannes uttending debates in the commons, 409, then exclusion, 429, n Lambton, Mr., his motion for reform, 300.

340 Lancaster, Duchy of, revenues of, attached to crown, 190, 197, 207, present amount, Land revenues of the crown See Rovenues of the Crown

Land tax, the, allowed twice over to crown tenanty, 212, reduced by vote of the commons, 471, third reading of a land tax bill delayed, 62, 472 Lansdowne, Marquess of, his amendment to resolutions for a regency, 177 Laudetdale, Earl of, condemns the king's conduct to the Grenville numerry, 96, 96, his rights as peer both of Great Britain and Scotland, 210 Leicestei, case of bilbory from corporato funds, 343

Lennox, Lady S, admired by George III, 220

Lafe peerages, 243, to women, ib, the Wensleydale peerage case, 246 Lave pool, Earl of, his ministry, 107, conduct the proceedings against Quren Caderia.

ichne, 109, 111
Louis to government, members bribed by shares in, d18, ce-sation of the system, 321

London, city of, address George III condemning the proceedings against Wilkes, 401

London Magazine, the, one of the first to repert parliamentary debates, 415

Lords, House of, relations of, with the crown, 2-3, influence of the crown exerted over the laids, 46, 57, 119, 260, debates on the influence of the crown, 44-47, reject the India Bill, 58, condemn the commons opposition to Mr Pitt, 66, proceedings on the reform bills, 118—120, 257, 352, proposed crea-tion of peers, 119, 259, 353, proceedings on the regency bills of George III 142 - 180, position of the house of lords in the state, 228, 252, increase of its numbers, 229-234, enlargement a source of strength, 253, number of peers, from Hunry VII to George III, 229, 281, twelve peers created in one day by Queen Anne, 229, representativo peers of Scotland and Irel and, 229, 233, sixteen poers created by William IV. 258, proposed restrictions upon the power of the clown, and the regent, in ereation of peers, 230, 232, profuse creations by George III, 231, position of the house in 1860, 235, n , its representative character, 237, 11ghts of peers of Scotland, 238-240, ap-

pellato junsdiction of the lords, 242, bill to improve it, 249, life poerige question, 248, Lords spiritud, 219, past and present number, ib, attempt to evalude them, 250, political posttion of the house, 252, 263, influence of parties, 254, collisions between the two houses, 266, the danger mereased, 256, creation of new pours equivalent to a dussolution, 262, position of the house since reform, 263, then independence, ib , proceedings indicating their power, 261 senty attend mee in the house, 266, 267. smallness of the quorum, 266, deference to leaders, 267, influence of peers over the commons through nomination boroughs, 276, and through territorial influence. 291, 300, refusal of the lords to indemmiy the witnesses against Walpole, 314, proceedings against Wilkes, 389, 393, "Druit le Rei" burnt, 391, address to condemn the city address on the Middlesex election proceedings, 402, debates on those proceedings, 398, 403, strangers and members excluded from debates, 410, 428, scene on one occasion, 110, reports of debates permitted, 427, 131, presence of struggers at divisions, 433, publicity given to committee proceedings, 16, to parliamentury papers, 434, privilege to servants discontinued, 447, pusoners kneeling at the bar, 418, control of the lords over the executive government, 457, advise the grown on 4 questions of peace and war, and of a dissolution, 438, rejection of a money bill, 474, sketch of parliamentary oritory, 480

Lords sputtual See Bishops Lottery tackets (government), mombers habed by 419

bulbed by, 319 Ludgershall, place of seat, 282 Lushington, Dr., a life peciage offered to,

Lusmington, DF, a life peeu age offered to, 245, disqualified from parliament, 311 Luttrell, Colonel, hus sister married to the Duke of Ounthelland, 219, opposits Wilkes for Middlesex, 396, enforces the exclusion of strangers, 428 Lyndhur-t, Lord, his motion on the life pearage case, 246

Lyttelton, Loid, his address respecting the regency, 143, his complaint against "Double Ros," 391

Lyttleton, Mi, his motion on the dismissal of the Gienville ministry, 96

Maccestreen, Lord, dended in favour of rights of crown over grandelidden, 221 Mackenzio, Mr S, dismissed from office, 28, 29

Marvell, A, reported proceedings in the commons, 414

Manchester, Duko of, strangers excluded on his motion relative to war with Sprin, 411 Munsfield, Lord, exhorts George III to exert his influence over parliament, 32, precedent of his admission to the cubract cited, 86, his opinion on the right of the commons to mempacitate Wilkes, 398, 404, accused by Wilker of altering a record, 392

Marchmont, Lord, his motion on the Middlesex election proceedings 400

Martin, Mr., his duel with Wilkes, 389 Mary (Quoen of England), her sign-manu il

iffixed by a stamp, 182

Melbourne, Viscount, in office, 121, his sudden dismissal, ib, reinstated, 126, in office at accession of her Mijesty, 127, organises her household, to , kept in office by the "Bodchambor Question," 128, 10signs office, 131

Melvillo, Loid, his imperchment, 161 Mombers of the House of Commons, number of nominee members, 299, larbed by pensions, 308, bubery under Charles II, 312, under William III, 313, George II, 314, George III, 314, 317, bribed by loans and lottenes, J18-J21, by contracts, 321, wages to, provided for m Lord Blandford's reform bill, 342, abolition of qualifications, 373, excluded from debates in the Lords, 411, system of pledges to constituents considered, 444, certain privileges of, discontinued, 116 See Commons, House of Middlesex Journal, the complaint against.

for misrepresenting debutes, 418 Middlesex, sheriff of committed by the House in the Stockdale actions, 452 Military officers, depained of command for opposition to the policy of Geo III, 24, 40, practice condemned under the Rockingham nanistry, 29 Miller, proceeded against for publishing debates, 420, the city authorities inter-

роче, 421 Ministers, of the clown, responsibility of, 5, 89, regarded with jealousy by George III, 8, constitutional relations between crown and manusters, 12-15, 89, 121, 128, 132, 464, anfinonco of tho crown exerted against its ministers, 31, 56, 76, 88, 114, the plodge exacted by George III of his ministers, 89, supported by the crown and the commons in reform, 115, 258, 352, influence of great families over ministries, 137, numerous applications to, for poerages, 236, votes of want of confidence, 49, 66, 69, 462, and of confidence, 118, 353, 462, ministers impeached by the commons, 463, the stability of recent ministries considered, 465, their finalicial arrangements dissented from, 470

Minorities, proposed representation of at elections, in a form bill (1854), 378 Morra, Ettl, his mission to the Whire leaders, 104, the "Household Question," 105 Morton, Mr., moves insertion of Princess of Walo's name into Regency Bill, 145 Murray, Lady A, married to the Duke of

Sussex, 226 Mining, Mi, refused to kneel at the bur of the commons, 448 Mutany bill, the passing of, postponed, 69

"Nabobs," the, then bubery it elections. 279, 282, rank themselves among the "King's friends," 280

Newcastle, Duke of, in office at accession of George III, 11, resigns, 18, dismissed from lord heutenancy, 20 Newchiam, Mr., motion for address on dobts of Prince of Walcs, 210

Now Shoreham, burbery at, 282, disfranclused, 283

Nomination boronche See Boronche North, Lord, his relations, as premier, with

Geo III, 37, complete submission, 38, 40, 50, he overtures to Chath m, 41, to the Whigs, 42, his ministry over-thrown, 47, 48, his conduct approved by the King, 49, joins the "coalition ministry," 53, 55, dismissed from office, 60, liberal in creation of peers, 231, in the bribery of members, 317, with money sont by George III, 10, by shares in a lo m, 319, his second loan, 321, approved the Middlesex election proceedings, 405, carriage broken by mob, 425, his personahties in debate, 492

Northampton borough, cost of electoral contest (1768), 282, case of bubery from corporate funds, 343

North Buton (No 45), the publication of, 386, 110t at the burning of, 388

Northumberland, Duke of, supported in busbery at elections by George III, 284 Notion, Sar F (the speaker), supports Dunning's icolutions, 45, his speech to George III, touching the civil list, 200. altercations with, 494

O'CONNELL, M1. advocates universal sufflage, &co. 343, 346, represented for libelling the house, 436, his position as an orator, 488

Officers under the crown, disqualified from parliament, 289, 307-312, number of, in parliament, 113, 309, 311 Oldfield, Dr , his statistics of parliamentary patronages, 300.

Ohver, Mr Alderman, proceeded against by the commons for commuttance then messenect, 422, 424 Onslow, Mr G, orders the house to be clemed. 412, complains of publication of debates, 413, 418, his solutionet, 417 See Purhamentary

Orators and oratory

Outory Oxford, seat for, sold by corporation, 281

Parks and penalties, ball of, against Queen Caroline, 109, 110

Palmeiston, Viscount, his removal from office, 1851, 133, actorn ball of his mustry, 381, his resolutions on the Lords' rejection of the paper duties bill, 478

Paper duties repeal bill (1860) rejected by the Lords, 265, 477 Puke, Su J See Wenskydule, Boron Path unent, government by, established at the Revolution, 1, subservient to the crowu, 2, constitution il position of, at the accession of George III, 14, violation of pathamentary privileges by the crown, 20, 24, 01, 39, 16, 08, the reform of pulla-ment, 116, 256, 326, the dissolution of 1807, 97, of 1830, 317, of 1831, 117, 352, of 1834, 125, of 1841, 131, influence of tandles over purhament, 137, meeting of parliament during George III 's illnesses, 146, 173, commissions for opening, 155, 156, 178, second opening after King's recovery (1789), 158, adjoun-ments caused by King's mability to sign commission for protogation, 146-173, purhament and the revenues of the grown and the civil list, 192-211, duration of parliament, 367, motions for tiiennial parhaments, ib , time between summons and meeting ot, shortened, 375, iclations of parliament to crown, liw, and people, 385-480, the unrenoted parliament, 110, n, publication of delates, 412, 123, petitions, 436, publicity given to parliamentary papers, hument over the executive government, 457, skotch of parlamentary oratory, 480, group of parliamentary orators of the are of Chatham and Putt, 181, of later times, 485, character of modern onatory, 490, personulities of former times, 491 See Commons, House of, parametry given to paintmentary papers, 434, ichnquishment of parhamentary pravileges, 436, purvilege and the courts of law, 448, publication of pipers af-fecting character, 454, control of pu-

Lords, House of Pease, Mr., his case eited regarding Jewish distibility, 150

Puel, Su R, old any consent of George IV to Citholic cm mem thon, 111, his first administration, 122, his absence abroad, 123, ministernal efforts, 124-126, vises a dissolution, 125, resignation, 126, cilled to office, 128, declines on the "Bed-chamber Question," 129, his swond administration, 131, his anti-reform deelaration, 346, character of his oratory,

Pecuage, number of, 229, of the United Kingdom, 235 and a , untiouty of, 206 . claims to, ib , changes in its composition. 237, the acpresentative character th 238, tusion of peerages of the three langulous, 241, life perrages, 243, to women, ch , peerages with remainders over, 211, authoritus fivouring life peerige th, offer of a life picture to Di Luslangton, 215, the Wensleydale poerage, 246 See also Lords, House of, Ircland, necrage of, Scotland, peering of

Peerage Bill (1720), rejected by the commons, 230

Peers, seanty attendance of, at the House, affecting then political weight, 266, social relations of, 265-271, their influence at county elections, 294, excluded from debites in the House of Commons, 412 See also Lords, House of

Pelham, M1 , bribery to members, a system under, 314

Pembroke, Earl of, proscribed for opposition to court pohey, 46 Penryn, the disfranchisement bill, 313.

proposal to transfer the franchise to Man chester, 314 Pensions from the erown charged on civil hat, 214-216, on crown revenues, 211. restrained by purhament, in 215, consolidation of pension lists, 218, regulation of (1837), th , bubers by pensions, 308, holders of, disqualified from perhament, 307

Perceval, Mr., forms un administration, 90, demes secret advice to George III, 91, dissolution during his ministry, 97, his aclations with the King, 98, his position at commencement of regency, 100, ob-noxious to the Regent as adviser of Princess Caroline, 101, ministerral negotiations at his death, 101

Petitions to parliament, commencement of the practice, 436, of political petitions, to , forbidden under Charles II , 437 . commencement of the modern system. th , petitions rejected, th , objected to by George III, 440, progress of the system, to , the numbers presented of late years, 141, n , thuses of petitioning, .

412, debates on presentation of, 10struned, 443, for grant of public money to be recommended by the crown, 472

Patt, Ma See Chatham, Earl of Pitt, Mi William, Chancelloi of the Exchequer under Lord Shelbmine, 53, 1cfusals to take office, 51, 55, is piemei, 60, opposed in the commons, 61 -- 70 his attitude respecting a dissolution, 63, final traumph, 70, reflections on this contest, 70-73, his relations with George III, 54, 74, furthers his views, 71, in opposition to the King on reform, 76, quits office on the Catholic question, 78, refusal to abandon that question, 80, 81, his mismanagement of it, 81, his pledge to the King not to revive it, 82, agun m office, 83, with Addington, 84, evides the Catholic question, 85, his comion on the nights of Prince of Wales as Rogent, 148-151, his lotter to him respecting the regency, 150, moves resolutions for a bill, to 154, proposition as to use of the great scal, 161, 165, untroduces the ball, 157, his conduct in these proceedings considered, 161, confirms the King's confidence in him, 162 embarrassment caused by the King's illness on his leaving office, 163, 165, brought forward budget after resignation, 164. his doubts as to the King's samty. on his return to office, 170, profuse in the erention of peers, 232, 233, his unfair 292, abolished some of the Irish nomination boroughs, 299, discontinued bisbes to members, 317, by loans and lotte-11es, 321, advocates reform, 329, 331, his reform bill, 331, opposes reform, 334. his position as an orator, 481 Pitt, Mr Thomas, moves to delay the grant of supplies, 472

Placemen See Officers under the Crown Pledges by members to constituents considered, 444

Plunket, Lord, his oratory, 487 Poole, corruption at, 281 Portland, Duke of (1696), enormons grant to, by William III, 191

Portland, Duke of, heads the "coultion." Army Service Bill, 88 Potwallers, electoral rights of, 275

Prince Regent See Wales, Prince of Printers, contest of the Commons with, 413, 418 See also Debates in Parliament Privileges and elections committee, tual of election petitions before, 302 Privileges of parliament Ses Parliament;

55, assists George III in opposing the Public money, difficulties in the issue of, cansed by George III's incapacity, 179, motions for to be recommended by the crown, 472

Public Works Commission separated from Woods and Forests, 213

QUALITICATION Acts, 373, repealed, th Queen's Bench, Court of, decide in favour of Stockdale, 451, 453, compel the sheriffs to pay over the damages, 453 Queensberry, Duke of, his lights as a pect of Great Britain and of Scotland, 239

RAWDON, Lord, moves address to the Pamee to assume the regency, 151

Reform in parliament, signments for, 326, advocated by Chatham, 327, Wilkes, 15, the Duko of Richmond, 328, the Gor-don 110ts unfavourable to, 329, Pitt's motions, 1b , discouraging effect of the French Revolution, 334 , Earl Grey's reform scheme, 336, Burdett's, 387, 338 Lord John Russell's, 339-345, Ma Lambton's, 340 , Lord Blundford's, 342 , later cases of conjuntion, 343, O'Connell's motion for universal suffrage, 346, the dissolution of 1830, 347, impulse given by French Revolution, 15, storm raised by Duke of Wellington's declaration, to . Biongham's motion, 349, Lord Grey's reform ministry, th , the first reform bill. 890 , ministers defeated by the commons. 117, 352, supported by the crown, so , the dissolution of 1831, 16 , second reform bill, 118, 352, sixtoen peers created by William IV, 258, bill thrown out by the Lords, 118, 258, 353, proposed cication of peers, 119, 259, 354, legignation of 1eform munistry, 119, 260, 350, supported by the commons and recalled to office, 119, 260, 355, the third bill passed, 120, 260, 355, the set considered, 355 Scotch and Irish acts, 357, 358, Irish flunchise extended, 358, political results of reform, 126, 359, 465, bubery and bubery acts since leform, 359-366. trienuial parliaments, 367, vote by ballot. 371, reform, later measures for, 375-384

Regency Act (1751), 140, the Act of 1765. 143-115, Princess of Wiles excluded by Lords, and meluded by Commons in the Act, 144, resolutions for Regency Bill (1788-9), 150-154, protest against, 154, proposed restrictions over the Regent's power to create peers, 232, resohitions accepted by Pinnes of Wales, 154, bill brought in, 157, progress interrupted by Geo III's recovery, 158, comments on these proceedings, 159, comparison of them to the proceedings at the Revolution, 160, the Regency Act of 1810, arguments against, 174-176, 180 . resolutions for a bill agreed to, 176 -178, laid before the Prince, 178, bill passed, ib., Regency Act (1830), provides for accession of an infant king, 183, for case of a posthumous child, 186, the Regency Acts of Hor Majesty, 187.

Regent, question as to origin and intent of the word, 152 and n See also Wales. Prince of

Reporters

See Debates in Parliament Representation in Parliament, defects in, 273 See also Reform in Parliament Revenues of the crown, its ancient possessions, 188, forfeitures ib, grants and alienations, 189, merouse of revenues by Henry VII and VIII, 190, destruction of revenues at Commonwealth, tb , accovery and subsequent waste, 191, 192, restraints on alienation of crown property, 192, constitutional result of improvidence of kings, th , settlement of crown nevenues by pulsament, 193, accounce prior to Revolution, 16, the civil list from William III to George III, 194, 195, settlement of Civil Last at accession of George III, 195, charges thereon, 197-203, means of crown militance, 198, surplus revenues, 203, regulation of civil list, 204, 206, other frown revenues, 197, 205, loss of Hanover revenues, 207, Duchies of Lancaster and Cornwall, 10, private property of crown, 208, provision for royal family, sb, insmanagement of land revenues, 211, proposal for sale of crown lands, 212, appropriation of proceeds, 213, pensions charged on lands and revenues, 214-

Revenue summysioners, the, first officeholde Adsqualified from parhament, 307, —Officers Disfranchisement Bill carried by the Rockingham ministry, 52, 290

Revolution, The, parliamentary government established at, 1, position of the crown since the Revolution, 2, revenues of the mown prior to, 193, commencement of permanent taxation at, 475

Revolutions in France, effects on the cause of reform, 334, 317

Rialton, Lady, case of, cited on the "Bedchamber Question," 130

Richard II . revenues of his grown, 189 Richmond, Duke of, his motion respecting the regency, 143, for reduction of civil list, 200, statement as to the nominee members, 299, advocates parliamentary reform, 328, his motion on the Middlesex election proceedings, 404 Roache, Mr , opposes M1 Wilkes for Middlesex, 397

Rockingham, Marquese, dismissed from lordheutenancy for opposing the crown, 20, mado promier, 29, his ministerial conditions, 16 , influence of the crown in parhament exerted in opposition, 32, 33, dismissed from office, 34, statements 1espectang the influence of the crown, 45, 47. his second administration, 51, carries the contractors, the civil list, and the revenue officers bills, 52, 203, 215, 289, 310, 323, and the reversal of the Middlesex election proceedings, 406, denounces pachamentary corruption by loans, 320, his motion condomning the resolution against Wilkes, 400, moves to delay the third reading of a land-tax bill, 472

Rolls, Master of, sole rudge not disqualified

from parliament, 312

Roman Catholic emancipation See Catholic Emancip ition Romilly, Sir S , his opinion on the plodge required from the Grenville ministry, 91, his justification of the purchase of seats,

285, 286 Ross, General, complains of court intimidation, 63

Rothschild, Baron, admission of, to pathament, 455

Rous, Sir J. his hostile motion agains Lord North's ministry, 49

Royal family, provision for, 208, 211; power of the clown over, 219-227, exempted from Lord Hardwicke's Marriage Act, 220.

Royal household, the, a question between the Wing leaders and the Regent, 105; profusion in George III's, 201; pro-posed reduction of Wilham IV's house-hold, 206

Royal Marriage Act (1772), 39, 221, its abitrary principles, 223

Royal Sign-Manual Bill, authorsing George IV to sign documents by a stamp, 180 -183

Russell, Lord John, his first motions for reform, 339-346, his disfianchisement hills, 340-344, advocates the enfranclusement of Leeds, Birmingham, and Manchester, 345, moves the first reform bill, 350, his later reform measures, 376, 381

Sr Albans disfranchised, 361 Salomons, M1, admission of, to Parliament, 456

Sendwich, Earl of, denounces Wilkes for the "Essay on Woman," 389, "Jemmy Twitchen," 390, n

Savile, Sir G, his motion condomning the resolution against Wilkes, 399, his bills to secure the rights of electors, 405

Saylindge, Mr., his motion for icform, 332, for shortening duration of parliament, 368.

Say and Sele, Lord, his apology to Mi Grenville for refusing a bribe, 316 Sept and lot, a franchise, 275

Scotland, defective requessination of prica to reform full, 205, 300 — headerfaxy crown svenness of, 197, 206, permonsthraged upon, 218, 217, consolination of the perspan of the representative prices of, 229, Scotland, 238, alleged disability, 45, rught of representative pers, 230, 240, rught of representative pers, 230, 240, rught of person of the United Kingdom, 241, —Souther placed Sugardom, 241, —Souther placed Sugardom, 241,

Reform Act of, 857
Scott, Sn John, the ministerial adviser during the regency proceedings, 180

Secret service money, issue of, restrained, 203, statement of amount ot, 315 Selkink, Rail of, supports the King on the

Cathohe question, 95 Septemial Act, efforts to repuil, 367, raguments against, 369, in favom, 370 Shattashury, bribery at, 283

Shafteshury, Lord, publishes a delute as a pumphlet 414

Shoil, Mr., character of his oratory, 489 Shellburn, Eul of dismussed from command for opposition to the cown, 24, his motion on the public expenditur, 45, on the untunadation of peers, 46, his administration, 52, supports the royal influence, 52

Sheridin, Mr., character of his oratory, 483 Shicusbury, Duke of, his precedent cited as to the temponar concentration of offfices in the Dike of Wellington, 123 distinguist, 123 distinguist, 123 distinguist, 123 distinguist, 123 distinguist, 123 distinguist, 124 distinguist, 125 distinguist,

Slave Trade, abolition of, idvocated by petitions to parliament, 439 Smith, Mr W, his ancodote as to bribery

Smith, Mr W, his acceptor as to bribery of members by Lord North, 317, n Sitesker of the House of Commons, elected during George LLL's incapacity, 152, alterestions with, 493, increased authority of the chan, ab

Spencer, Earl, election expenses of, 282 Stafford, Marquess of, his motion on the pledge exceed from the Grenville minus-pledge exceted from the Grenville minustry, 94 Stamp Act (American), influence of the crown exerted against repeal of, 31 Sterlo, Sir R., opposes Pecrage Bill, 230 Stockdule, Mr., his actions against Hansaid for libel, 450—454, committed for contempt, 453

Strangers, exclusion of, from debates in parhamont, 10%, commencement of their attendance, 400, attendance of ladies, 1b, their exclusion, 429, n, presence of strugges permitted, 431 Sudbury, seat for, offered for sale, 280, distranchised, 361

disfranciused, 361 Sunderland, Lidy, case of, cited on the "Bedehamber Question," 130

Supplies to the crown delayed, 64, 68, 472, refused, 469, granted, 470 Surrey, Eul of, lus motion on the dismussal of the 'coalition," 65 Sussex, Duke of, votes against a Regency Bill, 176, his mailinges, 226

Taxation and expenditure, control of the commons over, 193, 468, 473, tempolary and perm ment traition, 475

Taylor, Sn H, has encular letter, by command of Wilh un IV, to opposition peers, 119 Temple, Bull, prosecuted for interacy with Wilkes, 24, agent in the exertion of the whices, 24, agent in the evertion or rac crown influence against India Bill, 57, 58, employed to dismiss the "coalition," 60, accepts and resigns office, 61 Tennyson, Mi, motions to shorten duration

Tempson, 301, motions to shorten duration of parliament, 369 Thompson, proceeded against for publishing debates, 418, interposition of the city authorities, 421 Thurlow, Lord, negotiates for George JII

Thurlow, Lord, asgonates for George III, with the Wang, 43, his advance to the King on proposed retreat to Hunove, 65, co-oper, sicks in his opposition to take Influence of the Market of the Market

Tory party supplies the greater number of the "King's friends," 11, ascendency of, under George IV, 107, ascendency of, in House of Lords, 256

Townshend, Mr , his manosuvie to secure a share in a loan, 319, his proposed laud tax reduced by the commons, 171 'Creasury warrants, for resuc of public money during George III's meapherty, 180

Unnumoon, Lady C, married the Duke of Sussex, 226 Universal suffice, motions for, 328, 338,

Viotoria, Queen, het Minjesty, her accession, 127, the ministry them in office, dr, her household, dr, "Bedchamber Question," 128, 131, her memorandian conceining acts of government, 132, judicous excesse of her authority, 136, the Regency Acts of her reign, 187, het eval list, 206, her pension bist, 218

Wannend, bribery at (1860), 365
Waldegrave, Dowager Countoss of, married to the Duke et Glorester, 219

Waldegrave, Earl of, his opinion on the education of George III, 9

Wales, Pince of Gleong, IV), unted with sphe opposition, 77, he shumster, 90, sulged to comit influence, \(\theta\), untertient to politice and political fundation of the separation from the VBs, 101, 102, he separation from the VBs, 102, 103, he separation from the VBs, 103, 103, proposals for their unon with the Tories, 103, 104, the "household" question between him and the VBs, 105, obtains set to he sight; as 103, 104, 105, which is the properties of the sight of the 103 of the VBs, 105, obtains as to he sight; as and offe. 153, accepts the resolutions, 154, name omitted flood commission to open pulnament, 166, the address from the Lish pulnament, 162, accepts resolutions for Regency Bill (1810), 178, his civil list, 201, his debts, 200, his narrange with Dits Fitherbett, 226, the guantianship over Princess Chulotte, 227

Wales, Prince of, Duchy of Cornwall his inheritance, 207 Wales, Princes, Downger of, her influence over George III., 9, advocates the exercise of his personal authority, 21, the mention of her name into the Regency Bill, 144

Walpole, Horace, cited in proof of parhamentary corruption, 279, n., 315, 318, the appointment offered to his nephew, 309 Walpole, Mr., secedes from Lord Derby's ministry on question of reform, 380

Y. Unole, Su R., opposes Pectage Bill, 230, displace, from office by vote on election potition, 303, bribery of members a system under, 313, the charges of bribery not proved, 311, his remark on misrepresentations by reporters, 417

Winburton, Bishop, his name ffixed to notes in the "Essay on Woman," 389 Ward, Mr. advocates vote by bullet, 373

Ward, Mr, advocates vote by ballot, 373 Wellesloy, Marquess, commissioned to form a ministry, 104

a mustry, 104
Wellington, Dake of, obtuns consent of Grorge IV to Catholic omanopation, 111, anti-reform delaration of his minastry, 124, his anti-reform delaration massly, 112, 200, tonus a mustry with Feel, 121, 122, his assumption of different ealment of different ealment of different ealment of the Section of the Catholic Catholic

Wonsloydule, Baron, the late peerage cuso (1856), 246-248

Westminstor election (1781) Fox's vexitions contest it, 291, senting, and writwithheld, 292, act prised in consequence,

West India duties, the, vested in the crown fill accession of William IV 205 Westmoreland county, expense of a contested election for, 294

Weymouth, Lord, overtures to, from Geo
III, 42, libelled by Wilkes, 392

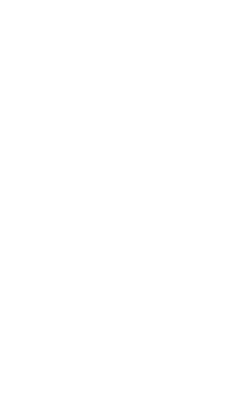

Wharnchife, Lord, his motion against the dissolution (1831), 118, 460 Wheble proceeded against for publishing debates, 418, duelunged from casted, by Wilkes, 420.

Whis purty, the, period of ascendancy, 7, 1eguided with jusions; by George III, 10, 13, 34, proverption of, under Loui Butt, 20, position it time of regency, 100, 101, separation between them and Ennes Regent, 106, 103, 106, decline Department of the property of th

Whitaker, Mr, opposes Wilkes for Middlesex, 397 Whitbroud, Mr, his remarks on the Percevalidation in the freeval numstry, 92, moves to omit Lord Eldon's name from the council of regency, 172 Whittam, a messenger of the house, commutted by the Lord Mayor for apprehending a printer, 421, his recognisine crused, 423, saved from prosecution, the Wilkes, Mr., advocates parlamentary reform, 327, denied his pirlimentary

bers, 444
Williams, Sir Hugh, passed over in a hievet for opposition to court policy, 40
William III, his personal share in the govenment, 5, his sign-m unul affixed by a string, 182, revinue of his crown, 191, grants to his followers, 10, his civil list, 194, tries to influence pallament by the multiplication of offices, 307, hilbs to members during reign of, 315, popular addepsesse to, paying dissolution of palament 460

William IV supports palamentary reform, 115, dissolves parlitment (1831), 117, 352, Gested sixtoen peers in favour of reform, 283, further creation of poors proposed, 110, 269, 354, exerts his influence over the peers, 110, 260, 355, vithdraws his confidence from the reform ministry, 120, saddenly simmases the

Melbourne munst , 12., the Wollin, and Peel munstry, 122, the Melbourne munstry in the Melbourne munstry in the Melbourne munstry in the Melbourne munstry in the second in 188, as to 1 198 for a large speathumous child, 188, in serul lab. 206, proposed reduction of the household, 200, surrenders the four and a half per event duties, 218 Wauthans, Mi, jhis position as an orator,

Wines and Cider Duties Bill (1763), first money bill divided upon by the Lords, 476

Woods, Fores, and Land Revenues Commission, 213, separated from Public Works, th "Woman, Essay on," Wilkes prosecuted

"Woman, Essay on," Wilkes prosecuted for publishing, 389 Wortley, Mr S, his motion for address to

Way, Sir C, opposed Fox at the Westmuster election, 292

Writs for new members, doubt respreting issue of during King's illness, 147, writs of summons for elections, addressed to returning officers, 375

YARMOUTH, frommen of, disfianchised, 361 York, Duke of, opposes a regency bill, 154, 176, his name omitted from commission to open parliament, 156, 178, attached to Lady Mury Coke, 220 Yorke, Mr., enforces the exclusion of strangers from debates, 429

Yorkshine petation, the, for purhamentary reform, 330, 438